Decibel level to be way down at the Patriots' camp

By The Associated Press

SMITHFIELD, R.I. — Screaming coaches and scheming kickers are missing from New England's training camp.

Under new coach Rod Rust, the assistants are quieter and the battle for kicking jobs, a competition often marked by mind games among the hopefuls, is non-existent.

After one week, the Patriots' camp remains free of controversy.

Unlike last year, when several placekickers and punters battled for jobs, kicker Jason Staurovsky and punter Brian Hansen are the only players at those positions in camp.

"It's a cleaner operation if you can do it," Rust said Tuesday. "I guess we'll find out if it's a mistake or not."

Last year, when Raymond Berry was head coach, the voices of defensive coaches Ed Khayat, Don Shinnick and Jimmy Carr often rose above the smack of colliding shoulder pads. Rust's defensive assistants — Charlie Sumner, Steve Nelson and Dale Lindsey — keep the decibels down.

If the players "regress and don't do well, maybe I'll throw a fit, who knows," the taciturn Rust said. "I don't expect that to happen.

"Each coach is certainly allowed to coach however he wants," he added. "If they're all quiet, then they're quiet."

But he does want them to "coach aggressively, coach in detail, correct every mistake and never do it in a demeaning manner. ... I want it to be instructional rather than emotional.

"They may be pretty aggressive without raising their voices."

Last year, Greg Davis and Staurovsky battled for the placekicking spot in camp. Punter Jeff Feagles also had competition. Davis and Feagles won, although Davis later was cut and replaced by Staurovsky.

At the team's mini-camp last May, Hansen beat out Feagles.

"It doesn't bother me" to have just one punter and kicker, Rust said. "All we did is move the calendar up."

Three Patriots were hurt in Tuesday's practice. Wide receiver Irving Fryar had a sore left Achilles' tendon, rookie running back James Gray sprained his right ankle and defensive back Tony Zackery suffered a groin strain.

Giants: Tight end Mark Bavaro, coming back from surgery to construct a ligament in his knee, is on a one workout-a-day regimen instead of the regular two-a-days.

Veteran linebacker Steve DeOssie returned to practice after suffering a minor cramp Monday while running on a wet field.

The Giants waived rookie Terry Sanders when the 6-foot-6, 330-pound defensive end from Grambling failed to finish the required one-mile run Monday.

Jets: Pro Bowl safety Erik McMillan returned to the New York Jets' camp after missing three workouts in a contract dispute.

McMillan was seeking renegotiation of his contract, which has two years to run. He earned $140,000 last year and is scheduled to make $187,000 this season. He faced $1,500 per day fines for the holdout.

Seahawks: Seattle agreed to terms with third-year cornerback Dwayne Harper and signed rookie running back Chris Warren, reducing their holdouts to six.

The Seahawks released free agent rookie fullback Felton Parquet from Southwestern Louisiana.

Lions: Detroit reduced its rookie holdouts to two by signing defensive lineman Marc Spindler, a third-round pick from Pittsburgh.

First-round pick Andre Ware of Houston and second-round selection Dan Owens of Southern California remain unsigned.

The Red Sox belted the Cubs, 17-9, Tuesday night at Cheney Tech. Marc Beaulieu singled, doubled and tripled and had six RBI to lead the Red Sox. Tony Muno and Eric Lavigne each drove in two runs and Cory Amende pitched well for the winners. Brian Gagnon doubled and had two RBI and Jaso Argros and Rob Kelly played well defensively for the Cubs.

The Mets topped the Yankees, 10-3, at Moriarty Field. Cory Coughlin scored three runs for the Mets.

Souter abortion stand emerges

By JOHN KING
The Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — U.S. Supreme Court nominee David Souter urged the Legislature on behalf of his fellow Superior Court judges nine years ago not to pass a bill requiring judges to approve abortions for minors.

Souter wrote a committee chairman that the judges did not want to be forced to decide whether a minor who did not have parental consent for an abortion should be allowed to terminate her pregnancy.

He said the bill before the legislature failed to provide guidelines for the judges to use in such decisions, and would also promote "judge-shopping" by petitioners seeking a judge inclined to give a favorable ruling.

The letter is among the few public statements Souter has made on the divisive issue of abortion, which is sure to play a major role in his confirmation hearings in Washington.

Since Souter made clear he was writing at the request of his fellow judges, abortion-rights advocates said they did not interpret the letter as an indication that Souter favored abortion rights.

"I wish we could say that you could interpret this that way, but you could just as easily say that he favors a parental consent law but just doesn't think the court or the judges should be involved," said Peg Dobbie of the New Hampshire chapter of the National Abortion Rights Action League.

Indeed, other Superior Court judges since Souter was elevated to the state Supreme Court have sent virtually identical letters to the Legislature during debate of parental-consent laws over the past decade, all of which have been defeated.

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that parental-consent laws must contain an option permitting a judge to decide if the minor seeking an abortion does not want to consult her parents.

On another subject Wednesday, Concord Hospital said that in February 1973 Souter was a member of the board of trustees that voted to allow the hospital to perform abortions.

The subject of abortion, perhaps the most emotional and divisive the Supreme Court addresses each year, is expected to figure prominently in senators' questioning of Souter at confirmation hearings in September.

Concord Hospital President Richard Warner had said Tuesday that abortion never came before the board when Souter was a member and later its president.

But on Wednesday, Warner said through a spokeswoman that while reviewing minutes of meetings held before he came to the hospital in 1975 he came across the minutes of the 1973 meeting.

ABORTION POSITION — U.S. Supreme Court nominee David Souter urged the New Hampshire Legislature nine years ago not to pass a bill requiring judges to approve abortions for minors.

Doctors had requested adoption of the policy statement because of the month-old Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion, Roe vs. Wade. Included in the statement, and still in effect, was a stipulation that hospital employees could refuse to assist with abortions.

Atlas 1 rocket finally launched

By MARCIA DUNN
The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — A satellite that will illuminate Earth's invisible magnetic field in shades of red, white and blue orbited the world today after a flawless ride into space on an unmanned rocket.

The 143-foot Atlas rocket roared into a clear sky Wednesday from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station and the satellite separated as planned after several delays.

"It's always a good feeling to see a launch vehicle leave the ground," NASA manager Sid Saucier said. "So far, everything is going great."

It was the fourth attempt in six days by NASA and rocket builder General Dynamics to launch the Atlas, the first commercial version of the rocket ever flown. The postponements were caused by a helium leak, bad weather and a corroded power transfer switch in the rocket.

The weather was perfect as the Atlas boosted the $189 million Combined Release and Radiation Effects Satellite to an orbit 217 miles by 22,236 miles high to study radiation in space.

The 2-ton satellite, a joint program of NASA and the Defense Department, holds 24 chemical-filled canisters that will be ejected starting this fall. Ultraviolet rays from the sun will ionize the released barium, lithium and other chemicals, creating large, glowing clouds that will spread along Earth's magnetic field lines.

The barium-laden clouds will resemble the aurora borealis, or the northern lights. The display will be visible to the naked eye, enabling scientists to measure electric fields in space and see how they interact with normally invisible charged particles.

The first releases will be made over American Samoa in the South Pacific in September. Four months later, people in North America will get their first glimpse of the clouds. Additional canisters will be released next summer over the Caribbean, providing a view from Florida and the southern portions of Alabama and Georgia.

Back pay awarded

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge awarded back pay and retirement benefits to a white former employee after ruling that three black city officials discriminated against him because of his race and age.

George P. Yedlovsky, now 73, worked in the Real Estate Department as a right-of-way agent, handling the acquisition of land for city services. He scored the highest of three agents on a 1985 exam for two vacant senior positions.

But the department's two top officials, director John Guess and assistant director Chere Lott, accepted the recommendation of a black supervisor, Andrew Williams, to promote two black agents instead. Their test scores were lower and their years of city experience were at best comparable with Yedlovsky's, according to testimony in the case.

Guess moved Yedlovsky in July 1985 to a new position called "Abstractor I," a titular demotion with similar pay. Yedlovsky was ultimately laid off in July 1987, 17 months short of retirement. He had been a city employee for 8½ years.

Senior U.S. District Judge John V. Singleton Jr., in a ruling Tuesday, wrote that George P. Yedlovsky's superiors had improperly denied him the promotion.

Singleton, noting that no one else held the post of "Abstractor I" before or since, said the move was a ploy "created to provide a place to dump" Yedlovsky.

Family leave legislation will return

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Supporters of guaranteed unpaid family leave for workers say Congress will keep sending a bill to President Bush until he signs it or they gain enough votes to override his veto.

"George Bush is going to have a family leave bill on his desk every year he is in office," said Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn.

Backers fell 53 votes short of the two-thirds majority needed in the House to override on Wednesday, sustaining Bush's veto of a family leave bill with a 232-195 vote.

"We're going to have this kind of legislation enacted, if not this year in this session, next year or the year after," said House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash. "It's inevitable."

Fifty-seven Democrats voted with Bush to sustain the veto, along with 138 Republicans. Voting to override were 194 Democrats and 38 Republicans.

The vote kept Bush's perfect veto record intact. It was the 13th veto of Bush's presidency, and Congress has failed to override any.

Democrats, and some Republicans, denounced Bush's veto and said it would provide Democrats with an issue in the fall elections. They pointed to polls that show large majorities of the public support the idea.

The bill would have required employers — except those with fewer than 50 workers — to provide unpaid, job-protected leave of up to 12 weeks to workers who have new babies or family illness or other emergencies. Those in the highest-paid 10 percent within a company would have been exempt.

Employers would have been required to continue health insurance benefits for those on leave. Once the employees returned, they would have to be restored to their previous jobs or equivalent positions.

Opponents charged the bill would be an onerous and costly new burden for businesses and hurt workers by discouraging employers from offering other types of benefits.

Rep. Steve Bartlett, R-Texas, praised Bush for his "courageous veto" and charged the bill would have imposed a "one-size-fits-all benefit" without regard to need.

Dodd, who guided the bill through the Senate, said he would introduce a new version in that chamber next week. He said it would have only minor differences and acknowledged it may be difficult to push the issue again in this session.

Foley said Democrats would not try to push a milder version of the bill this year. He said the vetoed measure was a moderate bill, requiring only unpaid leave, and that most industrialized nations have programs that meet or exceed it.

Barry trial witnesses claim FBI tried to influence them

By PETE YOST
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A Virgin Islands couple say they were badgered by the FBI to change their story that they never saw Mayor Marion Barry use drugs on a 1986 sailboat ride.

Carmen Benjamin told Barry's cocaine and perjury trial Wednesday that she was interviewed three times by agents, the final time late last year when she and her husband were summoned to FBI headquarters in Washington.

She testified that she felt so "pressured" and "harassed" that she pounded her hand on the table.

"Did you demand an end to the interrogation?" chief defense lawyer R. Kenneth Mundy asked.

"Yes, I did," Mrs. Benjamin replied.

But it didn't end and "you were interrogated after that," Mundy suggested.

"Yes," the woman agreed.

She said she was snorkeling while the sailboat was anchored in the Virgin Islands and didn't pay much attention to Barry and former model Rasheeda Moore. After the interrogation, the FBI decided it wouldn't put her under oath and have her testify before a federal grand jury investigating Barry's drug use.

The mayor is accused of 10 misdemeanor counts of cocaine possession, one misdemeanor conspiracy charge and three felony counts of lying to the grand jury.

Convicted drug dealer Charles Lewis testified earlier in the trial that he and Barry smoked marijuana aboard the sailboat, on which the Benjamins were passengers.

Mrs. Benjamin's husband was being questioned at the same time she was, but in a separate room at FBI headquarters.

Did the FBI and a city police detective "attempt to pressure you to change your story?" Robert Mance, one of Barry's lawyers, asked Albert Benjamin.

"Yes," Benjamin replied.

"What did they do to try and get you to change?" asked Mance.

"Kind of kept driving home the point that I had to know, I had to see, I had to be aware of" drug use by Barry, said Benjamin.

Benjamin said one of his interrogators was "getting on top of you, crowding ... so that I told him in no uncertain terms, 'Mister, you pushed your luck a little too far.'"

Benjamin said he arrived in Washington "tired and in pain" from a recent injury.

Skipper's license suspended

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Former Exxon Valdez skipper Joseph Hazelwood could be back in command of a ship in nine months under a penalty imposed by the Coast Guard for the nation's worst oil spill.

Hazelwood, in an interview, said he was satisfied that the Coast Guard dismissed misconduct and negligence charges against him and decided to let him to resume his career.

At a Coast Guard hearing Wednesday, Administrative Law Judge Harry Gardner suspended Hazelwood's captain's license for nine months and put him on probation for three more months.

Misconduct and negligence charges were dismissed after Hazelwood agreed to enter no-contest pleas on two other counts: that he violated Coast Guard policy by drinking liquor less than four hours before taking command of the tanker, and that he improperly left the vessel's bridge while it was headed for jagged Bligh Reef.

But Hazelwood said after the hearing he was angered by newly disclosed papers about crucial blood-alcohol tests that had implied he was drunk when the tanker spilled nearly 11 million gallons of crude last year.

Hazelwood's attorneys said the blood analyzed may not have been his.

"It's what we said all along and nobody would listen to us," Hazelwood said. "The possible skuldugery that goes along with it is enough to make anybody angry.

"If it weren't for our discovery of this, it would have been buried forever and a lot of people with political agendas would have been very happy."

Hazelwood's attorneys contended that evidence may have been covered up, a charge the Coast Guard and National Transportation Safety Board denied.

The 987-foot tanker was en route from the Alaskan port of Valdez to Long Beach on March 24, 1989, when it struck the reef in Prince William Sound.

Wednesday's hearing followed a trial in which an Alaskan jury acquitted Hazelwood of charges of intoxication and recklessness, but convicted him on a misdemeanor of negligently discharging oil. He is appealing.

Czechoslovakian leader confronted about his past

By ROLAND PRINZ
The Associated Press

SALZBURG, Austria — President Vaclav Havel of Czechoslovakia today warned of the dangers of lying about the past in comments indirectly critical of President Kurt Waldheim, his host during a controversial visit to the city.

Havel and the West German president, Richard von Weizsaecker, were Waldheim's guests as the Salzburg Festival of music and drama opened. Most Western leaders have shunned Waldheim for concealing his Nazi past, and the presidents' visit angered Jewish groups.

Both leaders repeatedly emphasized the visits were private, not official. No private meetings with Waldheim were planned.

American Rabbi Avi Weiss was arrested with an associate inside the festival hall after he forced his way into the lobby shouting: "It's a shame to meet Waldheim!"

Weiss and three other activists also protested Wednesday outside Weizsaecker's sprawling West Berlin palace, wearing concentration camp uniforms.

Havel's comments in the opening ceremony were made in the context of changes in Eastern Europe over the past year that instituted democracy. While he never mentioned Waldheim's name, some of the language appeared clearly directed at the Austrian president, who sat stone-faced in the first row.

"The expectation that one can negotiate his way through history without punishment and be able to rewrite his own biography is part of the traditional madness of middle Europe," said Havel. "Whoever tries to do this, hurts himself and his fellow citizens.

Waldheim, a former U.N. secretary-general, drew international criticism for concealing his service as an intelligence officer with a Nazi army unit implicated in atrocities in Yugoslavia and Greece during World War II. He has denied wrongdoing.

Since his election in 1986, Waldheim has been shunned by most Western nations, including the United States.

This month, Cypriot President Georgios Vasiliou became the first Western head of state to make an official visit to Austria since Waldheim's election. Pope John Paul II met with Waldheim in 1987.

Heinz Galinski, head of the German Jewish Council, said last week he was "shocked" over Weizsaecker's meeting with Waldheim.

Weiss, in a statement Tuesday, condemned both Waldheim and Weizsaecker. "We view the meeting of Havel and Weizsaecker with Waldheim as obscene and we will be raising a voice of moral conscience against Waldheim, who is an unrepentant Nazi," the rabbi said.

"We especially are outraged that at a time of German reunification, the president of West Germany is meeting with Waldheim. The only way Germany can move forward is to reject people like Waldheim," Weiss said.

"I am attending a cultural event as a private person," Havel said in an interview published Wednesday by the Salzburger Nachrichten newspaper.

"However, at the time of the visit I am also president — that is something one cannot discard, that is to say something official remains attached to any of my visits."

While Havel criticized Western leaders for continuing to steer clear of Waldheim, he made it plain he was unlikely to make a state visit to Austria as long as Waldheim is president. Waldheim's term is to expire in 1992.

The Czechoslovak state news agency CTK carried a statement today by Havel's office saying the former dissident accepted the invitation to the festival last year, when it appeared unlikely the then-ruling Communists would let him go.

Report: Israel condones needless Palestinian deaths

By G.G. LaBELLE
The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — An American human rights group is accusing Israel's government of condoning needless killing of Palestinians by failing to curb soldiers' excesses or to adopt tight rules on opening fire.

"Israeli policies all too often encouraged a lack of restraint by IDF (Israel Defense Force) troops," says a 126-page report released Wednesday by Middle East Watch, which is based in Washington, D.C., and New York.

The group says the death toll from army gunfire in the 31-month Palestinian uprising could be drastically cut "if senior military and civilian officials were determined to stop unjustified killings."

The report comes on the heels of similar findings by other human rights groups. Early this month, Amnesty International said many Palestinian victims in the uprising died "in circumstances suggesting excessive use of force or deliberate killings."

In a written response to the Middle East Watch report, the army denied that Israel ignores Palestinians' rights or condones violations.

"Israel is concerned about the issue of human rights no less than its critics," the army said. It said that Israel has imposed stricter restrictions on soldiers opening fire than mandated under international law.

The army also said the report completely ignores "wide-ranging incidents of terrorism in the uprising," including killings by Palestinians of fellow Arabs as alleged collaborators with Israel.

Eric Goldstein, the group's research director and author of the report, said Middle East Watch officials have condemned "collaborator killings" in testimony before U.S. congressional committees.

The report says troops have confronted the uprising with loaded M-16 or Galil assault rifles, while army figures show that soldiers were faced with guns in only 5 percent of incidents. The other 95 percent involved stone throwing, slingshots and such weapons as iron bars.

"The imbalance of weaponry underscores the propriety of treating the intefadeh (uprising) as a civil revolt rather than a war," the report says.

In 450 Palestinian deaths through June 1989, no more than 16 soldiers were court-martialed on charges of causing death and no more than 10 were convicted, says the report, which was released in Jerusalem and Washington.

The report uses the army death toll of 670 Palestinians killed in army gunfire in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

According to figures gathered by The Associated Press, 724 Palestinians have been killed by Israeli soldier and civilians in the revolt. At least 242 Palestinians have been slain by fellow Arabs, most as suspected collaborators. Forty-five Israelis also have been killed.

An Israeli human rights group said last month that soldiers violated firing orders by shooting 14 Palestinians in the head, chest or back despite regulations calling for them to aim for their legs. The Israeli Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, known in Hebrew as Betselem, had studied casualties during disturbances following the May 20 massacre of seven unarmed Arab laborers by a deranged Israeli civilian.

Aquino refuses to unfreeze Marcos money for relief

By OLIVER TEVES
The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — President Corazon Aquino will not agree to release funds frozen by U.S. courts so that former first lady Imelda Marcos can donate money to earthquake relief, Press Secretary Tomas Gomez said today.

On Wednesday, a lawyer for Mrs. Marcos said the former first lady had offered to donate about $5 million for earthquake relief if U.S. and Philippine officials agree to release money frozen by American courts.

"The point is, if she (Mrs. Marcos) is really sincere about giving money, she can get in touch with the Philippine National Red Cross. That's as simple as that," Gomez said in an interview.

Gomez said Mrs. Marcos, widow of the late President Ferdinand Marcos, had money beyond that in the frozen accounts that she could donate to the relief effort.

Asked if the government was willing to unfreeze the Marcos accounts, Gomez said: "Of course not. Why should the government? They (accounts) are all sequestered.

"The trouble with Imelda is she is so insincere," Gomez said. "She is using the disaster for her foolishness.

Mrs. Marcos lawyer, James Linn, said some of the Marcos assets frozen by the 1986 court order are in Swiss banks and some in Hong Kong. He did not give an estimate of amount in the accounts.

Linn said U.S. officials would be asked this week to issue a court order releasing the funds.

Philippine officials claim Marcos had kept up to $10 billion in Swiss accounts, but no proof has been offered to support the amount claimed.

The July 16 earthquake killed more than 1,600 people, injured more than 3,000 and destroyed the homes of 90,000 people in the northern Philippines.

Official preliminary estimates of damage totaled nearly $700 million. This is expected to rise as reports from remote areas reach Manila.

On July 2, a federal jury in New York acquitted Mrs. Marcos of racketeering, fraud and obstructing justice in connection with the alleged theft of more than $220 million from the Philippines treasury during Marcos' 20-year rule.

Mrs. Marcos has remained in New York, rather than returning to Hawaii, where she had lived since fleeing Manila during the 1986 military-civilian uprising the Mrs. Aquino rode to power.

Her husband died in Hawaii in September.

Both the Philippines and U.S. governments have banned Mrs. Marcos return to her homeland, citing national security threats.

Secret weapons removed

By TERRENCE PETTY
The Associated Press

CLAUSEN, West Germany — A convoy of trucks today began removing a vast cache of deadly nerve gas that was secretly stored by the United States just outside this small West German town.

The convoy took away the first batch of 100,000 gas-filled artillery shells stored at a U.S. military site at Clausen, which is near Kaiserslautern in the southwest part of the country.

The lethal cargo, destined for destruction on a Pacific atoll, is being removed under a 1986 U.S.-West German agreement at a cost of $83.1 million.

Hundreds of crack paramilitary West German police troops lined the convoy route and stood guard on overpasses as the the long line of 80 trucks began shuttling the shells at about 8 a.m.

Vans carrying police with riot gear accompanied the convoy.

West German authorities said someone phoned in a bomb threat against the convoy but that the first shipment proceeded without incident.

The first trucks arrived at Miesau, about 30 miles away, 2½ hours later. At Miesau, the containers are to be loaded onto special trains that will take them to Nordenham, on the North Sea, where they will be placed aboard U.S. Navy ships for transport to Johnston Atoll.

The weapons will be destroyed in a specially built incinerator on the U.S. atoll about 800 miles southwest of Hawaii.

Only about 20 of the 80 trucks that left Clausen actually carried the chemical weapons sealed in air-tight containers, said U.S. Army spokesman Jim Boyle.

Iraq agrees to resolve differences with Kuwait

By ALAH NASRAWI
The Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq has agreed to pull thousands of troops back from its disputed border with Kuwait, diplomatic sources say, after apparently forcing Kuwait to agree to end oil overproduction.

Today, Iraqi newspapers suddenly ceased what had been daily attacks on Kuwait, and an Iraqi official confirmed that Iraqi and Kuwaiti representatives would open talks this weekend in the Saudi Arabian port of Jiddah.

But the official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said President Saddam Hussein has not backed down on demands that Kuwait cut oil production, pay for oil Baghdad claims was pumped illegally from a field that straddles the countries' unmarked border and forgive billions of dollars in loans.

"The ball is in the Kuwaiti court now," he said.

Diplomatic sources said late Wednesday that tens of thousands of troops reportedly sent to the border earlier this week by Saddam would begin withdrawing today.

In Geneva, where OPEC was holding a mid-year meeting, Iraq's oil minister denied there had even been a troop buildup, as published reports and diplomats had said. "There is no such thing as massing of troops along the border," said Issam Abdul Rahim al-Chalabi.

Oil-rich Iraq, with a $70 billion foreign debt after a fall in crude prices and a costly war with Iran, last week threatened military action against fellow oil producers Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates for contributing to the overproduction that has driven down the price of crude.

Iraq has 17 million people, including 1 million soldiers. Kuwait has 1.8 million residents, 20,300 in the armed forces. The U.A.E. has about 1.6 million residents and a military with about 43,000 personnel.

In Geneva, OPEC oil cartel members this week are trying to put a lid on production to drive up the price, and officials from Kuwait and the U.A.E. indicated Wednesday that they are ready to go along.

Looking Back

Manchester's stonemason

By G.S. ADAMS

Cudgo Quaggeryquise, a black man, dropped his first name and became Quaggery Quisy or Quicy. He married Milcha Perkins and their son Alpheus was born in Windham June 1774. Cudgo and his sons Alpheus and Henry dealt in real estate in Southeastern Connecticut.

From the diary of Rev. Levi Nelson, Lisbon, Conn.: "Thursday Nov. 24 1808, Thanksgiving, in the evening married Alpheus Quicy to Lucinda Jackson."

Alpheus Quicy of Ellington married as his second wife Anna Simpson Nov. 30 1815. She was Joanna Quicy when she joined the Methodist church on Spencer Street in 1818.

Quicy built a field stone house on the north side of West Center St. where he lived for the rest of his life. There was a wooden house east of the stone house and his property is described as eight acres, two dwellings, one of stone. In 1840, Chauncey Freeman lived in the wooden house.

Alpheus built a dwelling for Union Mfg. Co. on their land in 1826 fo r which he was paid five hundred dollars.

In 1830, he mortgaged his Manchester property to carry on business in Farmington.

In 1834, Anne H. Olcott conveyed to A. Quicy "nine acres west on Lewis Bunce and my own land, east on Samuel C. McKee" and "the right of raising the dam across the small stream to make a fish pond and the sole and exclusive right to taking fish in said pond when made and at all times to repair such dam when necessary."

In 1864, Quicy deeded his property to his son-in-law, Robin Lewis Freeman and took a life lease on it — Alpheus and Joanna to have the use of the stone house as long as they lived.

One year later Joanna died and her passing was noted by Rose (Wetherell) Keeney of Manchester who wrote "Mrs. Quicy was buried Sept. 21 1865." Alpheus died Feb. 16, 1876, age one hundred years and eight months and both are buried in West Cemetery.

Mathias Spiess wrote in 1935: "Alpheus Quicy, a stonemason, lived in a stone house which he built when a young man. He also built the stone house on Bidwell Street, still standing, also the Sidney Olcott house. Many dams all over town were constructed by Quicy."

"He was a small man, never seen on Sunday without wearing his stove pipe hat. With cape in hand and a large homemade cigar in his mouth, dressed in his Sunday best, he would strut along the road tipping his hat and bowing to all he would meet, in the friendliest manner. This was A.J. Quicy, the famous stonemason of Manchester."

In 1876, Robin Lewis Freeman sold the Quicy property to Frederick Trebbe, a farmer, who died in 1895. The stone house was used as a barn and later taken down.

J. B. Olcott sent his daughter a picture with the notation: "This is not the old house in which I was born but it looks very like it. She got afire several times in the heavy oak chimney jamb and it took all the oxen in the West District to pull the old house down." The stone house that replaced the wooden house was built by Alpheus Quicy and became known as the Sidney Olcott house. Sidney Olcott (1795-1883) was a strong anti-slavery man and it is said that his house was a station on the underground railroad during the Civil War.

The Sidney Olcott house on the west end of Olcott Street, occupied in 1918 by "the family of the late Martin Hayes, was struck by lightning about eleven o'clock May 10 and the interior of the house was destroyed. The bolt struck in the chimney in the upper part of the house and, as the house was outside the fire district, the fire made great progress before aid was rendered. The fire apparatus was not on the scene until after midnight. All the firemen could do then was to save the adjoining buildings."

The only one of the field stone houses that were built in Manchester by Quicy and still standing today is the one on Bidwell Street. This one was built for Walter Bunce (1822-1876) had a paper mill on Hop Brook for a few years after the 1869 flood.

A busy, confused court

ROBERT WAGMAN

WASHINGTON — Many observers thought it symbolic that the Supreme Court ended its confusing 1989-90 term by issuing an important death penalty ruling – and them immediately contradicting it in another decision, without seeming to notice it was doing so.

By a vote of 5-4, the court upheld Arizona's death penalty law. The next day, however, by a 4-3 vote, it announced that it would not hear an appeal by the State of Arizona of a Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals decision voiding the death penalty of John Harvey Adamson. He was convicted of the 1976 murder of Phoenix reporter Dan Bolles. The Ninth Circuit had voided Adamson's death penalty because it had been imposed by a judge, not a jury. That very process is at the heart of the Arizona law the court had just upheld.

The four justices voting to let stand the lower court's unconstitutional ruling were consistent – they were the same four who formed the minority in the death penalty decision. But neither Justices Sandra Day O'Connor nor Anthony Kennedy – who voted with the majority in the death penalty case – took part in the decision on the Adamson case. No explanation was given of why they did not participate in the decision, but court sources say it was simply that both justices had already left town for the summer when the case was circulated by Chief Justice William Rehnquist. he, apparently, did not see any contradictions in the ready-to-be-announced decision.

While the overall direction of the court is decidedly more conservative, the large number of 5-4 decisions, especially in important cases, shows how deeply divided the court remains.

During its most recent term, the court issued 129 rulings. Thirty-seven were decided by the minimum 5-4. In almost all these cases the newer, conservative Reagan appointees – Justices O'Connor, Kennedy and Antonin Scalia joined with Chief Justice Rehnquist to form the conservative bloc, while Justices William Brennan, Thurgood Marshall, Harry Balckmun and John Paul Stevens formed the moderate-to-liberal faction.

Justice Byron R. White – the second most senior justice after Brennan – is the swing vote. In 32 of the 37 one-vote decisions, White voted with the majority. With only one exception, he voted with the conservatives in criminal law matters, while lining up about half the time against the conservatives on cases involving social and constitutional issues.

For example, White voted with the majority to uphold Congress' ability to enact affirmative action programs – in this case two Federal Communication Commission regulations to increase the number of minority radio and television station license owners.

The court showed its conservatism mostly in criminal cases. In 35 criminal law decisions, the police or prosecution won 27. Fifteen of these were by one vote, and White's was the deciding vote in 14. These cases significantly increased police and prosecutors' rights, while limiting prisoners' rights and the appeal rights of those already convicted. In three separate 5-4 rulings, the death penalty laws of Arizona, California and Pennsylvania were upheld.

On abortion, the court showed how divided and confused it remains. The court struck down one version of a Minnesota law but upheld another version the state had passed requiring parental notification before a minor can have an abortion, if – and only if – she has the alternative of going to a judge for permission. All nine justices wrote opinions, and O'Connor, who was the swing vote in two 5-4 votes, wrote two separate opinions.

In a key First Amendment ease the court ruled 5-4 that flag burning is constitutionally protected act of free expression. Given that two of the most conservative justices, Kennedy and Scalia, voted with the majority, some court insiders speculate they did so because they want to force the adoption of an anti-flag burning constitutional amendment.

One little-noticed ruling this term reverses 50 years of constitutional decisions and has the potential to severely limit freedom of religion. By a 6-3 vote, with Scalia writing a majority opinion (reflecting his extraordinarily narrow interpretation of the personal freedoms contained in the Constitution), the court held that the state of Oregon could forbid the use of peyote in most American religious ceremonies. In doing so, the four conservative justices, joined by Stevens, established a test that effectively says government can restrict the practice of religion so long as it can show a reasonable need, and so long as it applies the restriction uniformly to all religions.

That test was too much for O'Connor. While agreeing with the specific Oregon decision (and thus becoming the sixth vote), she bitterly criticized this new test, calling it "incompatible with our nation's fundamental commitment to individual religious liberty."

Hypocrisy thrives on Capitol Hill

By JACK ANDERSON and DALE VAN ATTA

WASHINGTON — The member of Congress who is boasting about exposing the shortcomings of first son Neil Bush lives in one of the biggest glass houses on Capitol Hill.

Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., is chairman of the House Subcommittee on Financial Institutions Supervision, Regulations and Insurance. He sports a lapel button demanding jail time for the "S&L crooks."

That is the new Frank Annunzio – born again in an election year when it is fashionable to whip the savings and loans. The old Frank Annunzio was not nearly so harsh.

That is because he takes his cues on the S&L issue from his chief banking assistant, Curtis A. Prins. And not long ago, Prins was eating dinner in the home of Charles H. Keating Jr.

Keating is the former owner of Lincoln Savings and Loan. The taxpayers own it now, and its collapse will cost them about $2 billion. It has been fashionable to blame the "Keating five" – five senators who took big campaign contributions from Keating and then went to bat for him against S&L regulators who knew better. But from the look of things, the "Keating five" had better make room for more.

Our associates Michael Binstein and Tim Warner have learned about two trips Prins took at the invitation of the generous Keating.

On March 2, 1987, Prins flew to Southern California and Arizona to, in his words, acquaint himself with the operation of Lincoln Savings and Loan. He also acquainted himself with the swank Crescent Hotel, then owned by Keating, where Prins stayed, for free. And he was a dinner guest at Keating's home.

Traveling with Prins was Dave Evans, a Washington lobbyist for Keating's holding company, American Continental Corp. Evans, a former Democratic congressman from Indiana, has been one of the most visible and aggressive advocates for Keating on Capitol Hill. Last year, for example, he sought to short circuit a House Banking Committee Investigation into Keating and Lincoln.

Annunzio and Prins have been among the most outspoken critics of a regulation that Keating also sought to kill. It would have reined in the investment powers of industry high flyers.

After Prins enjoyed Keating's hospitality in Arizona – including a round of golf that Prins doesn't remember who paid for – he and Evans took a side trip to Las Vegas on Keating's jet. They stayed at Bally's Casino and Resort, and Evans picked up the bill.

Within a month, Prins was the dinner guest of Evans and another Keating lobbyist, James Grogan, at the pricey Washington, D.C., restaurant, Lion D'Or.

In line with the ethics rules of the House of Representatives, Prins reported the trip to California and Arizona on his financial disclosure form. He listed the reason, to "visit savings and loans to discuss … recapitalization legislation." The form says Evans paid the bills. Prins failed to mention the side trip to Las Vegas on his financial disclosure form. He now claims that he repaid Evans "in cash."

When asked about the favors from Keating, Prins told us, "Keating snookered me. I wasn't the only one."

Annunzio has taken $3,000 in campaign contributions from Keating. He is caught in a tough re-election race in Chicago where his opponent is making claims that Annunzio is more responsible than others for the S&L fiasco.

The revelations about Annunzio's staffer hint that there is plenty of blame to go around.

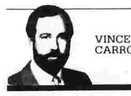
The Atwater touch

President Bush's biggest handicap in the "no-new-taxes" controversy is the absence of his sidekick Lee Atwater. Atwater, recovering from a brain tumor, has left the Republican Party in turmoil. Insiders say that if he had been at the helm of the party when Bush caved in to the need for new taxes, the president would have looked better. Atwater would have advised Bush against making any abrupt changes and then would have found a way to let Bush accept a tax increase without accepting any blame for breaking his promise.

Mini-editorial

McChord Air Force Base, near Tacoma, Wash., recently staged an air show which looked suspiciously like a tasteless re-enactment of the U.S. invasion of Panama. Base officials said it wasn't, but their advance publicity said it was. The invasion of another country is at best a necessary evil, with the emphasis on evil. It is the last, saddest, most violent option when all others have failed. A re-enactment only stokes the Rambo types that think there is honor in aggression. They are usually the people who weren't there. We doubt that the families of the more than 500 people who died in Panama would appreciate an invitation to a re-enactment.

Let's tax the rich, by George!



VINCENT CARROLL

George Bush, you're no Abraham Lincoln.

Few presidential press conferences in recent years have witnessed a moment of such surpassing humbug as when Bush the Prevaricator invoked Lincoln the Emancipator's theory of leadership to explain why he had betrayed 49 million voters and agreed to raise taxes.

Of course, Lincoln hiked taxes in his day, too, but he did it to support an army charged with keeping the union together. Bush, a man of dime-store dreams, agreed to raise taxes merely in order to hold together a "budget summit" of foot-dragging politicians.

Now the vital question becomes who will pay for the president's mendacity. Will it be the average fellow hoisting a six-pack off the shelf, the commuter filling his gasoline tank, the poor tobacco addict in line for another carton of Camels?

Quite possible it will be all three, since every list of likely tax targets seems to mention alcohol, gasoline and tobacco. Yet why should an already heavily taxed middle class be forced to ante up still more to sate Washington? There happens to be a much better place to locate additional revenue: in the bank accounts of the president's establishment friends.

Yes, it's time to soak the rich, and here are two good reasons why:

1) They asked for it.

OK, so they haven't exactly begged for higher taxes on themselves. Wealthy, they are. Masochistic, they're not. Nevertheless, surveys of corporate leaders have revealed a large portion of the nation's highest-paid executives itching to see taxes raised on the rest of us. The same attitude apparently typifies the high-fliers of the financial markets, who showed their appreciation of the president's decision to chuck his no-tax pledge by pushing up the stock market nearly 20 points on the very next day.

Poetic justice alone demands that they sup on the stew they helped prepare.

2) They can afford it.

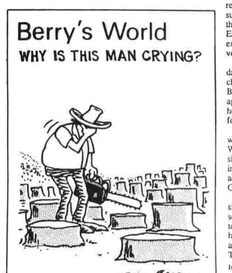
In 1981, the highest-paid corporate executive ean $5.7 million. By last year that figure had jumped to nearly $54 million (we're talking about annual income, hard as it is to believe). And while in 1980 the average chief executive officer could expect to make 40 times the income of an average factory worker, by 1989 that same CEO was pulling down 93 times as much.

But let's not pick on CEOs alone. At least they run companies that create America's wealth. As Kevin Phillips recounts in his new book, "The Politics of Rich and Poor," the real action in recent years has been in finance and law. Michael Milkin's estimated take of $500 million may have surprised even some of his peers on Wall Street, but annual earnings of $40 million or so among such wheeler-dealers are not uncommon.

Meanwhile, there are many more lawyers than CEOs making six- and seven-figure incomes today. Phillips reports that trial lawyer Joseph Jamail pulled down $450 million in 1988 alone.

Rather than taxing beer, gasoline and cigarettes, how about taxing luxuries? Slap a 1 percent tax on furs, cars costing more than $50,000 and similar toys of the rich. And cap mortgage-interest deductions for the second and third homes.

The truth is that Uncle Sam doesn't need more revenue, if only Congress dared to trim unjustified spending. But if we can't stop higher taxes altogether, we might as well shove them onto the few people who might not miss the cash.



Because, like Alexander the Great, he has no more worlds to conquer.

Home sales post modest gain

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Sales of existing homes posted their first increase in seven months in June, but analysts were divided Wednesday on whether the modest 1.2 percent gain offered at least the glimmer of rebound for the depressed housing sector.

The National Association of Realtors said sales of existing single-family homes edged up to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.34 million units.

The June advance was the first increase in sales since a 3.2 percent gain in November. Since then, existing home sales have either fallen or remained unchanged as the housing industry was battered by rising mortgage rates.

Industry officials said they viewed the June advance as an encouraging sign that better days may be ahead, especially in light of the fact that mortgage rates have been declining in recent months.

Fixed-rate mortgages fell to 9.99 percent last week, according to a national survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. It marked the first time rates have been below 10 percent in six months.

"People have been watching to see which way rates are headed. Now, they're out scouting the inventory. In general, it appears the market is building up steam," said Norman D. Flynn, president of the Realtors group.

But, David Wyss, an economist with DRI-McGraw Hill Inc., said he saw little reason to believe that the small June upturn in existing home sales would be followed by further gains.

"We may have found the floor for the slump in housing, but I don't think we will be coming off of it for awhile," Wyss said. "People just aren't as excited about owning a home because the investment prospects don't look as good as they did in the 1990s."

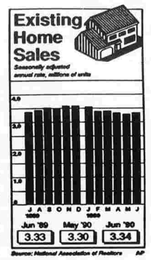
The median price of an existing home rose 2 percent in June, to $97,500. The median is the midpoint, with half the homes selling for more and half for less.

The sales strength in June came from a sharp 9.1 percent jump in activity in the Midwest, where existing homes were sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 960,000 units.

Sales also were up in the West by a smaller 1.8 percent, to an annual rate of 580,000 units.

The other two regions of the country posted sales declines. In the South, sales fell a slight 0.8 percent to an annual rate of 1.31 million units.

Sales were off 5.8 percent in the Northeast, to an annual rate of 490,000 units as that section of the country continued to exhibit extremely weak sales activity.



Deposit insurance limit imminent

By DAVE SKIDMORE
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady appears to be leaning against lowering the $100,000 limit on deposit insurance but in favor of restricting insurance to one account per person.

In an appearance Wednesday before the Senate Banking Committee, Brady refused to be pinned down on what specific changes he favors in deposit insurance.

But he said, "I can't see a rush to lower it (the insurance limit) at this particular time."

Asked about limiting insurance to one account per person, he said, "If you were going to start any place, that would be a place to start."

Brady said the Treasury was studying a proposal to charge depositors a fee for insurance, an idea that sparked a furor when it was first floated by the Bush administration in January 1989 and then quickly withdrawn.

Currently, depositors do not pay for insurance directly. However, banks and savings institutions pay a premium.

Charging banks with risky portfolios more for deposit insurance is an idea "we should look very closely at," Brady said.

His statements were similar to views expressed by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan to the Banking Committee earlier this month.

Brady agreed with Sen. Donald W. Riegle, D-Mich., the committee chairman, and Sen. Jake Garn of Utah, the senior Republican on the panel, that Congress should overhaul the financial system next year.

He said his department would make specific recommendations on the overhaul after the end of this year when it completes a study of the issues.

Many economists blame deposit insurance for encouraging savings and loan owners to speculate wildly because they knew the government would pay off depositors if their gambles soured.

However, Brady said the S&L crisis should not deter Congress from permitting commercial banks to venture into the insurance and securities industries.

"I don't think we ought to take the thrift debacle and make it such a big factor in our minds that we don't face the issues in the banking industry," he said.

The thrift industry was deregulated without requiring S&L owners to risk more of their own money, Brady said. Consequently, any expansion of bank powers ought to be linked to strong capital requirements, he said.

"We learned all too painfully from the thrift crisis that a crucial protection for the taxpayer is requiring firms to have a substantial amount of their own money at risk to absorb losses," he said.

"We will not propose changes to the financial services regulatory structure that would increase the taxpayers' exposure," Brady said. "… Retaining the status quo is not an attractive option."

Banks are losing some of their best business to securities firms, who underwrite short-term borrowing called commercial paper for major companies, he said.

At the same time, banks have been hindered from freely expanding across state lines and fully entering such lucrative fields as insurance and securities, the Treasury secretary said.

As a result, banks have had to concentrate their lending in riskier areas such as commercial real estate lending, energy and farm loans and leveraged buyout loans, he said.

Brady suggested "there are lessons to be learned" from the banking system in Europe, where banks enjoy much wider financial powers than in the United States.

He also said the complex system of financial regulation in the United States ought to be streamlined. Currently, there are three federal agencies regulating banks, another overseeing S&Ls and one supervising credit unions, plus 50 state regulatory agencies.

Hundreds attend plant dedication

By DOINA CHIACU
The Associated Press

SEABROOK, N.H. — Fourteen years after ground was broken for the Seabrook nuclear plant, operators dedicated the $6.6 billion structure in a ceremony marked by the rhetoric of survival.

An invocation by Rev. John Wood, a former health physics instructor at Seabrook, gave thanks Wednesday that Seabrook was completed and operating "in the face of the opposition and scorn of our neighbors."

Ed Brown, president of Seabrook operator New Hampshire Yankee paid tribute before an audience of about 700 people to both utility executives and the rank-and-file employees that remained loyal to the plant.

"The story of our joint owners is a story of perseverance and commitment in the face of the longest licensing battle in American history," he said.

High profile figures in Seabrook's 22-year history said holding on to the idea of a nuclear power plant in New Hampshire was well worth it.

"We couldn't give up," said former Gov. Meldrim Thomson. "Why not? We need the energy."

Thomson, a staunch supporter of the plant who forced the jailing of 1,414 protesters during May 1977 demonstrations, said he was happy to see the plant reach 100 percent power, though at "an almost prohibitive cost."

A handful of plant foes gathered outside the gates. "We will be a presence here," said Dianne Dunfey of the Clamshell Alliance.

Each of Seabrook's 12 owners was represented, along with a figure from Seabrook's past that cast a long shadow — Bill Derrickson.

Derrickson was pivotal in securing the completion of an unfinished Seabrook when he was hired in 1984.

Construction of the plant, which began in 1976 under Thomson, was finished in 1986, but Seabrook did not receive its Nuclear Regulatory Commission license until March, two years after Seabrook's lead owner, Public Service Company of New Hampshire, filed for bankruptcy.

"In the nuclear world — in the licensing process — you're guilty until you prove your innocence. And to do that, it takes a long time," said Derrickson.

Licensing delays, cost overruns and heavy borrowing at high interest to pay for Seabrook forced Public Service's bankruptcy. Its reorganization by Connecticut-based Northeast Utilities includes a rate agreement that will hike electricity rates 5.5 percent a year for seven years.

"Beauty is in the eyes of the beholder," said Derrickson. "Future generations will probably view it as a fairly low price to pay for electric generation."

A younger generation — the children of a plant control room operator — flipped a switch symbolizing full power to reveal a colorful neon-lit display of the plant connected to a utility pole and a map of New England.

Brown paid tribute to executives and rank-and-file plant workers, while Northeast's Chief Executive Officer, Bill Ellis, anticipated taking over Seabrook operation.

"We obviously did not want to proceed or take any steps that would interfere in the process of getting the plant running," said Ellis.

Northeast's takeover, expected toward the end of the year, would follow an agreement among Seabrook's owners and an application to the NRC to transfer operating responsibilities, according to John Eichorn, who is retiring this month as head of the joint owners' committee on Seabrook.

Officials also unveiled a permanent granite monument marking 100 percent power.

Despite loss, high hopes for Digital

By LESLIE DREYFOUS
The Associated Press

BOSTON — Digital Equipment Corp. took its first ever quarterly loss amid significant staff reductions, but analysts predicted times won't get any tougher for the world's second-largest computer maker.

"I think they've been through the worst of it," said Terry Shannon, an analyst with International Data Corp. in Framingham, Mass. "I don't foresee any long-term problems for Digital."

The company reported a $256.7 million fourth-quarter loss Wednesday, the computer giant's first ever quarterly loss and a reflection of a voluntary severance program under which 3,000 employees left over the last 12 months.

Mark Steinkrauss, director of investor relations, said Digital's restructuring program included plans to cut another 5,000 to 6,000 people in the coming months through voluntary severance and attrition.

The loss by one of New England's most important companies provided further evidence of economic trouble in the region, which grew quickly during the boom years of the 1980s but tumbled into recession because of the slumping high-technology, financial services and real estate industries.

But some securities analysts who follow Digital saw the loss as a piece of good news because it showed the company was aggressively trying to cut expenses while remaining competitive.

"I'm encouraged that they decided to bite the bullet and do it," said Marc Schulmann, an analyst with UBS Securities Inc. in New York. "Things are as bad as they're going to get, and now they're going to get better."

Added Steinkrauss: "The company knew exactly what it was doing…in light of what it needs to do in terms of reducing its cost structure."

Still, the news was not well received on Wall Street. Digital stock fell 62½ cents a share to $74.87½ in New York Stock Exchange trading.

Employee retraining, separation incentives and other costs associated with the Maynard, Mass.-based company's restructuring program cost $400 million in the fourth quarter.

Senior Vice President John F. Smith also attributed the computer maker's loss to "the continuing economic slowdown that affects both U.S. and several other markets."

For its fourth quarter ended June 30, the company said it lost $2.11 a share on revenue of $3.4 billion, compared with earnings of $313.2 million, or $2.51 a share, on revenue of $3.5 billion for the same quarter in 1989.

Profits for the full fiscal year after absorbing pretax charges of $550 million fell to $74.4 million or 59 cents a share, from $1.1 billion or $8.45 a share in 1989. Digital's sales were up 2 percent to $12.9 billion, from $12.7 billion last year.

"Increasing profit is the most important challenge the company faces," Smith said in a statement. "We are not satisfied with our operating results and will continue focusing on revenue growth and reducing our cost structure."

He said the company was reducing costs by identifying positions that are no longer needed, either because of changes in technology or business practices.

"We expect to begin receiving ongoing cost savings from these actions in the current year, and the full impact will be realized by next fiscal year," Smith said in the statement.

Schulman, who predicted Digital's turnaround would take about two years, said many of the bigger other affected companies have included Unisys Corp., Control Data Corp., Amdahl Corp., Bull HN Information Systems Inc., Wang Laboratories Inc. and Prime Computer.

Looking Back

Manchester's stonemason

By G.S. ADAMS

Cudgo Quaggeryquise, a black man, dropped his first name and became Quaggery Quicy or Quicy. He married Milcha Perkins and their son Alpheus was born in Windham June 1774. Cudgo and his sons Alpheus and Henry dealt in real estate in Southeastern Connecticut.

From the diary of Rev. Levi Nelson, Lisbon, Conn.: "Thursday Nov. 24 1808, Thanksgiving, in the evening married Alpheus Quicy to Lucinda Jackson."

Alpheus Quicy of Ellington married as his second wife Anna Simpson Nov. 30 1815. She was Joanna Quicy when she joined the Methodist church on Spencer Street in 1818.

Quicy built a field stone house on the north side of West Center St. where he lived for the rest of his life. There was a wooden house east of the stone house and his property is described as eight acres, two dwellings, one of stone. In 1840, Chauncey Freeman lived in the wooden house.

Alpheus built a dwelling for Union Mfg. Co. on their land in 1826 fo r which he was paid five hundred dollars.

In 1830, he mortgaged his Manchester property to carry on business in Farmington.

In 1834, Anne H. Olcott conveyed to A. Quicy "nine acres west on Lewis Bunce and my own land, east on Samuel C. McKee" and "the right of raising the dam across the small stream to make a fish pond and the sole and exclusive right to taking fish in said pond when made and at all times to repair such dam when necessary."

In 1864, Quicy deeded his property to his son-in-law, Robin Lewis Freeman and took a life lease on it — Alpheus and Joanna to have the use of the stone house as long as they lived.

One year later Joanna died and her passing was noted by Rose (Wetherell) Keeney of Manchester who wrote "Mrs. Quicy was buried Sept. 21 1865." Alpheus died Feb. 16, 1876, age one hundred years and eight months and both are buried in West Cemetery.

Mathias Spiess wrote in 1935: "Alpheus Quicy, a stonemason, lived in a stone house which he built when a young man. He also built the stone house on Bidwell Street, still standing, also the Sidney Olcott house. Many dams all over town were constructed by Quicy."

"He was a small man, never seen on Sunday without wearing his stove pipe hat. With cape in hand and a large homemade cigar in his mouth, dressed in his Sunday best, he would strut along the road tipping his hat and bowing to all he would meet, in the friendliest manner. This was A.J. Quicy, the famous stonemason of Manchester."

In 1876, Robin Lewis Freeman sold the Quicy property to Frederick Trebbe, a farmer, who died in 1895. The stone house was used as a barn and later taken down.

J. B. Olcott sent his daughter a picture with the notation: "This is not the old house in which I was born but it looks very like it. She got afire several times in the heavy oak chimney jamb and it took all the oxen in the West District to pull the old house down." The stone house that replaced the wooden house was built by Alpheus Quicy and became known as the Sidney Olcott house. Sidney Olcott (1795-1883) was a strong anti-slavery man and it is said that his house was a station on the underground railroad during the Civil War.

The Sidney Olcott house on the west end of Olcott Street, occupied in 1918 by "the family of the late Martin Hayes, was struck by lightning about eleven o'clock May 10 and the interior of the house was destroyed. The bolt struck in the chimney in the upper part of the house and, as the house was outside the fire district, the fire made great progress before aid was rendered. The fire apparatus was not on the scene until after midnight. All the firemen could do then was to save the adjoining buildings."

The only one of the field stone houses that were built in Manchester by Quicy and still standing today is the one on Bidwell Street. This one was built for Walter Bunce (1822-1876) had a paper mill on Hop Brook for a few years after the 1869 flood.

Evans, a former Democratic congressman from Indiana, has been one of the most visible and aggressive advocates for Keating on Capitol Hill. Last year, for example, he sought to short circuit a House Banking Committee Investigation into Keating and Lincoln.

Annunzio and Prins have been among the most outspoken critics of a regulation that Keating also sought to kill. It would have reined in the investment powers of industry high flyers.

After Prins enjoyed Keating's hospitality in Arizona – including a round of golf that Prins doesn't remember who paid for – he and Evans took a side trip to Las Vegas on Keating's jet. They stayed at Bally's Casino and Resort, and Evans picked up the bill.

Within a month, Prins was the dinner guest of Evans and another Keating lobbyist, James Grogan, at the pricey Washington, D.C., restaurant, Lion D'Or.

In line with the ethics rules of the House of Representatives, Prins reported the trip to California and Arizona on his financial disclosure form. He listed the reason, to "visit savings and loans to discuss ... new legislation." The form says Evans paid the bills. Prins failed to mention the side trip to Las Vegas on his financial disclosure form. He now claims that he repaid Evans "in cash."

When asked about the favors from Keating, Prins told us, "Keating snookered me. I wasn't the only one."

Annunzio has taken $3,000 in campaign contributions from Keating. He is caught in a tough re-election race in Chicago where his opponent is making claims that Annunzio is more responsible than others for the S&L fiasco.

The revelations about Annunzio's staffer hint that there is plenty of blame to go around.

A busy, confused court

ROBERT WAGMAN

WASHINGTON — Many observers thought it symbolic that the Supreme Court ended its confusing 1989-90 term by issuing an important death penalty ruling – and them immediately contradicting it in another decision, without seeming to notice it was doing so.

By a vote of 5-4, the court upheld Arizona's death penalty law. The next day, however, by a 4-3 vote, it announced that it would not hear an appeal by the State of Arizona of a Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals decision voiding the death penalty of John Harvey Adamson. He was convicted of the 1976 murder of Phoenix reporter Dan Bolles. The Ninth Circuit had voided Adamson's death penalty because it had been imposed by a judge, not a jury. That very process is at the heart of the Arizona law the court had just upheld.

The four justices voting to let stand the lower court's unconstitutional ruling were consistent – they were the same four who formed the minority in the death penalty decision. But neither Justices Sandra Day O'Connor nor Anthony Kennedy – who voted with the majority in the death penalty case – took part in the decision on the Adamson case. No explanation was given of why they did not participate in the decision, but court sources say it was simply that both justices had already left town for the summer when the case was circulated by Chief Justice William Rehnquist. So, apparently, did not see any contradictions in the ready-to-be-announced decision.

While the overall direction of the court is decidedly more conservative, the large number of 5-4 decisions, especially in important cases, shows how deeply divided the court remains.

During its most recent term, the court issued 129 rulings. Thirty-seven were decided by the minimum 5-4. In almost all these cases the newer, conservative Reagan appointees – Justices O'Connor, Kennedy and Antonin Scalia joined with Chief Justice Rehnquist to form the conservative bloc, while Justices William Brennan, Thurgood Marshall, Harry Balckmun and John Paul Stevens formed the moderate-to-liberal faction.

Justice Byron R. White – the second most senior justice after Brennan – is the swing vote. In 32 of the 37 one-vote decisions, White voted with the majority. With only one exception, he voted with the conservatives in criminal law matters, while lining up about half the time against the conservatives on cases involving social and constitutional issues.

For example, White voted with the majority to uphold Congress' ability to enact affirmative action programs – in this case two Federal Communication Commission regulations to increase the number of minority radio and television station license owners.

The court showed its conservatism mostly in criminal cases. In 35 criminal law decisions, the police or prosecution won 27. Fifteen of these were by one vote, and White's was the deciding vote in 14. These cases significantly increased police and prosecutors' rights, while limiting prisoners' rights and the appeal rights of those already convicted. In three separate 5-4 rulings, the death penalty laws of Arizona, California and Pennsylvania were upheld.

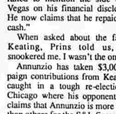
On abortion, the court showed how divided and confused it remains. The court struck down one version of a Minnesota law but upheld another version the state had passed requiring parental notification before a minor can have an abortion, if – and only if – she has the alternative of going to a judge for permission. All nine justices wrote opinions, and O'Connor, who was the swing vote in two 5-4 votes, wrote two separate opinions.

In a key First Amendment case the court ruled 5-4 that flag burning is constitutionally protected act of free expression. Given that two of the most conservative justices, Kennedy and Scalia, voted with the majority, some court insiders speculate they did so because they want to force the adoption of an anti-flag burning constitutional amendment.

One little-noticed ruling this term reverses 50 years of constitutional decisions and has the potential to severely limit freedom of religion. By a 6-3 vote, with Scalia writing a majority opinion (reflecting his extraordinarily narrow interpretation of the personal freedoms contained in the Constitution), the court held that the state of Oregon could forbid the use of peyote in native American religious ceremonies. In doing so, the four conservative justices, joined by Stevens, established a test that effectively says government can restrict the practice of religion so long as it can show a reasonable need, and so long as it applies the restriction uniformly to all religions.

That test was too much for O'Connor. While agreeing with the specific Oregon decision (and thus becoming the sixth vote), she bitterly criticized this new test, calling it "incompatible with our nation's fundamental commitment to individual religious liberty."

Let's tax the rich, by George!



VINCENT CARROLL

George Bush, you're no Abraham Lincoln.

Few presidential press conferences in recent years have witnessed a moment of such surpassing humbug as when Bush the Prevaricator invoked Lincoln the Emancipator's theory of leadership to explain why he had betrayed 49 million voters and agreed to raise taxes.

Of course, Lincoln hiked taxes in his day, too, but he did it to support an army charged with keeping the union together. Bush, a man of dime-store dreams, agreed to raise taxes merely in order to hold together a "budget summit" of foot-dragging politicians.

Now the vital question becomes who will pay for the president's mendacity. Will it be the average fellow hoisting a six-pack off the shelf, the commuter filling his gasoline tank, the poor tobacco addict in line for another carton of Camels?

Quite possible it will be all three, since every list of likely tax targets seems to mention alcohol, gasoline and tobacco. Yet why should an already heavily taxed middle class be forced to ante up still more to sate Washington? There happens to be a much better place to locate additional revenue: in the bank accounts of the president's establishment friends.

Yes, it's time to soak the rich, and here are two good reasons why:

1) They asked for it.

OK, so they haven't exactly begged for higher taxes on themselves. Wealthy, they are. Masochistic, they're not. Nevertheless, surveys of corporate leaders have revealed a large portion of the nation's highest-paid executives itching to see taxes raised on the rest of us. The same attitude apparently typifies the high-fliers of the financial markets, who showed their appreciation of the president's decision to chuck his no-tax pledge by pushing up the stock market nearly 20 points on the very next day.

Poetic justice alone demands that they sup on the stew they helped prepare.

2) They can afford it.

In 1981, the highest-paid corporate executive made $5.7 million. By last year that figure had jumped to nearly $54 million (we're talking about annual incomes, hard as it is to believe). And while in 1980 the average chief executive officer could expect to make 40 times the income of an average factory worker, by 1989 that same CEO was pulling down 93 times as much.

But let's not pick on CEOs alone. At least they run companies that create America's wealth. As Kevin Phillips recounts in his new book, "The Politics of Rich and Poor," the real action in recent years has been in finance and law. Michael Milkin's estimated take of $500 million may have surprised even some of his peers on Wall Street, but annual earnings of $40 million or so among such wheeler-dealers are not uncommon.

Meanwhile, there are many more lawyers than CEOs making six- and seven-figure incomes today. Phillips reports that trial lawyer Joseph Jamail pulled down $450 million in 1988 alone.

Rather than taxing beer, gasoline and cigarettes, how about taxing luxuries? Slap a 1 percent tax on furs, cars costing more than $50,000 and similar toys of the rich. And cap mortgage-interest deductions for the second and third homes.

The truth is that Uncle Sam doesn't need more revenue, if only Congress dared to trim unjustified spending. But if we can't stop higher taxes altogether, we might as well shove them onto the few people who might not miss the cash.

Home sales post modest gain

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Sales of existing homes posted their first increase in seven months in June, but analysts were divided Wednesday on whether the modest 1.2 percent gain offered at least the glimmer of rebound for the depressed housing sector.

The National Association of Realtors said sales of existing single-family homes edged up to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.34 million units.

The June advance was the first increase in sales since a 3.2 percent gain in November. Since then, existing home sales have either fallen or remained unchanged as the housing industry was battered by rising mortgage rates.

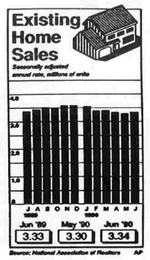
Industry officials said they viewed the June advance as an encouraging sign that better days may be ahead, especially in light of the fact that mortgage rates have been declining in recent months.

Fixed-rate mortgages fell to 9.99 percent last week, according to a national survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. It marked the first time rates have been below 10 percent in six months.

"People have been watching to see which way rates are headed. Now, they're out scouting the inventory. In general, it appears the market is building up steam," said Norman D. Flynn, president of the Realtors group.

But David Wyss, an economist with DRI-McGraw Hill Inc., said he saw little reason to believe that the small June upturn in existing home sales would be followed by further gains.

"We may have found the floor for the slump in housing, but I don't think we will be coming off of it for awhile," Wyss said. "People just aren't as excited about owning a home because the investment prospects don't look as good as they did in the 1990s."



The median price of an existing home rose 2 percent in June, to $97,500. The median is the midpoint, with half the homes selling for more and half for less.

The sales strength in June came from a sharp 9.1 percent jump in activity in the Midwest, where existing homes were sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 960,000 units.

Sales also were up in the West by a smaller 1.8 percent, to an annual rate of 580,000 units.

The other two regions of the country posted sales declines. In the South, sales fell a slight 0.8 percent to an annual rate of 1.31 million units.

Sales were off 5.8 percent in the Northeast, to an annual rate of 490,000 units as that section of the country continued to exhibit extremely weak sales activity.

Deposit insurance limit imminent

By DAVE SKIDMORE
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady appears to be leaning against lowering the $100,000 limit on deposit insurance but in favor of restricting insurance to one account per person.

In an appearance Wednesday before the Senate Banking Committee, Brady refused to be pinned down on what specific changes he favors in deposit insurance.

But he said, "I can't see a rush to lower it (the insurance limit) at this particular time."

Asked about limiting insurance to one account per person, he said, "If you were going to start any place, that would be a place to start."

Brady said the Treasury was studying a proposal to charge depositors a fee for insurance, an idea that sparked a furor when it was first floated by the Bush administration in January 1989 and then quickly withdrawn.

Currently, depositors do not pay for insurance directly. However, banks and savings institutions pay a premium.

Charging banks with risky portfolios more for deposit insurance is an idea "we should look very closely at," Brady said.

His statements were similar to views expressed by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan to the Banking Committee earlier this month.

Brady agreed with Sen. Donald W. Riegle, D-Mich., the committee chairman, and Sen. Jake Garn of Utah, the senior Republican on the panel, that Congress should overhaul the financial system next year.

He said his department would make specific recommendations on the overhaul after the end of this year when it completes a study of the issues.

Many economists blame deposit insurance for encouraging savings and loan owners to speculate wildly because they knew the government would pay off depositors if their gambles soured.

However, Brady said the S&L crisis should not deter Congress from permitting commercial banks to venture into the insurance and securities industries.

"I don't think we ought to take the thrift debacle and make it such a big factor in our minds that we don't face the issues in the banking industry," he said.

The thrift industry was deregulated without requiring S&L owners to risk more of their own money, Brady said. Consequently, any expansion of bank powers ought to be linked to strong capital requirements, he said.

"We learned all too painfully from the thrift crisis that a crucial protection for the taxpayer is requiring firms to have a substantial amount of their own money at risk to absorb losses," he said.

"We will not propose changes to the financial services regulatory structure that would increase the taxpayers' exposure," Brady said. "... Retaining the status quo is not an attractive option."

Banks are losing some of their best business to securities firms, who underwrite short-term borrowing called commercial paper for major companies, he said.

At the same time, banks have been hindered from freely expanding across state lines and fully entering such lucrative fields as insurance and securities, the Treasury secretary said.

As a result, banks have had to concentrate their lending in riskier areas such as commercial real estate lending, energy and farm loans and leveraged buyout loans, he said.

Brady suggested "there are lessons to be learned" from the banking system in Europe, where banks enjoy much wider financial powers than in the United States.

He also said the complex system of financial regulation in the United States ought to be streamlined. Currently, there are three federal agencies regulating banks, another overseeing S&Ls and one supervising credit unions, plus 50 state regulatory agencies.

Hundreds attend plant dedication

By DOINA CHIACU
The Associated Press

SEABROOK, N.H. — Fourteen years after ground was broken for the Seabrook nuclear plant, operators dedicated the $6.6 billion structure in a ceremony marked by the rhetoric of survival.

An invocation by Rev. John Wood, a former health physics instructor at Seabrook, gave thanks Wednesday that Seabrook was completed and operating "in the face of the opposition and scorn of our neighbors."

Ed Brown, president of Seabrook operator New Hampshire Yankee paid tribute before an audience of about 700 people to both utility executives and the rank-and-file employees that remained loyal to the plant.

"The story of our joint owners is a story of perseverance and commitment in the face of the longest licensing battle in American history," he said.

High profile figures in Seabrook's 22-year history said holding on to the idea of a nuclear power plant in New Hampshire was well worth it.

"We couldn't give up," said former Gov. Meldrim Thomson. "Why not? We need the energy."

Thomson, a staunch supporter of the plant who forced the jailing of 1,414 protesters during May 1977 demonstrations, said he was happy to see the plant reach 100 percent power, though at "an almost prohibitive cost."

A handful of plant foes gathered outside the gates. "We will be a presence here," said Dianne Dunfey of the Clamshell Alliance.

Each of Seabrook's 12 owners was represented, along with a figure from Seabrook's past that cast a long shadow — Bill Derrickson.

Derrickson was pivotal in securing the completion of an unfinished Seabrook when he was hired in 1984.

Construction of the plant, which began in 1976 under Thomson, was finished in 1986, but Seabrook did not receive its Nuclear Regulatory Commission license until March, two years after Seabrook's lead owner, Public Service Company of New Hampshire, filed for bankruptcy.

"In the nuclear world — in the licensing process — you're guilty until you prove your innocence. And to do that, it takes a long time," said Derrickson.

Licensing delays, cost overruns and heavy borrowing at high interest to pay for Seabrook forced Public Service's bankruptcy. Its reorganization by Connecticut-based Northeast Utilities includes a rate agreement that will hike electricity rates 5.5 percent a year for seven years.

"Beauty is in the eyes of the beholder," said Derrickson. "Future generations will probably view it as a fairly low price to pay for electric generation."

A younger generation — the children of a plant control room operator — flipped a switch symbolizing full power to reveal a colorful neon-lit display of the plant connected to a utility pole and a map of New England.

Despite loss, high hopes for Digital

By LESLIE DREYFOUS
The Associated Press

BOSTON — Digital Equipment Corp. took its first ever quarterly loss amid significant staff reductions, but analysts predicted times won't get any tougher for the world's second-largest computer maker.

"I think they've been through the worst of it," said Terry Shannon, an analyst with International Data Corp. in Framingham, Mass. "I don't foresee any long-term problems for Digital."

The company reported a $256.7 million fourth-quarter loss Wednesday, the computer giant's first ever quarterly loss and a reflection of a voluntary severance program under which 3,000 employees left over the last 12 months.

Mark Steinkrauss, director of investor relations, said Digital's restructuring program included plans to cut another 5,000 to 6,000 people in the coming months through voluntary severance and attrition.

The loss by one of New England's most important companies provided further evidence of economic trouble in the region, which grew quickly during the boom years of the 1980s but tumbled into recession because of the slumping high-technology, financial services and real estate industries.

But some securities analysts who follow Digital saw the loss as a piece of good news because it showed the company was aggressively trying to cut expenses while remaining competitive.

"I'm encouraged that they decided to bite the bullet and do it," said Marc Schulman, an analyst with UBS Securities Inc. in New York. "Things are as bad as they're going to get, and now they're going to get better."

Added Steinkrauss: "The company knew exactly what it was doing. ..in light of what it needs to do in terms of reducing its cost structure."

Still, the news was not well received on Wall Street. Digital stock fell 62½ cents a share to $74.87½ in New York Stock Exchange trading.

Employee retraining, separation incentives and other costs associated with the Maynard, Mass.-based company's restructuring program cost $400 million in the fourth quarter.

Senior Vice President John F. Smith also attributed the computer maker's loss to "the continuing economic slowdown that affects both U.S. and several other markets."

For its fourth quarter ended June 30, the company said it lost $2.11 a share on revenue of $3.4 billion, compared with earnings of $313.2 million, or $2.51 a share, on revenue of $3.5 billion for the same quarter in 1989.

Profits for the full fiscal year after absorbing pretax charges of $550 million fell to $74.4 million or 59 cents a share, from $1.1 billion or $8.45 a share in 1989. Digital's sales were up 2 percent to $12.9 billion, from $12.7 billion last year.

"Increasing profit is the most important challenge the company faces," Smith said in a statement. "We are not satisfied with our operating results and will continue focusing on revenue growth and reducing our cost structure."

He said the company was reducing costs by identifying positions that are no longer needed, either because of changes in technology or business practices.

"We expect to begin receiving ongoing cost savings from these actions in the current year, and the full impact will be realized by next fiscal year," Smith said in the statement.

Schulman, who predicted Digital's turnround would take about two years, said many of the bigger computer companies are scrambling to update product lines and keep up with overseas competitors.

"Given their size, it's going to take awhile," he said. "The underlying problem is the shift in the structure of demand toward work stations and PCs (personal computers) — areas which do not represent a high percentage of their revenue."

Companies are also beginning to scale back from the explosive expansion of the early 1980s, when the industry boomed in California's Silicon Valley and along Massachusetts Route 128.

More recently layoffs and other job reductions have been widespread among industry giants like Digital.

In December, IBM announced it would eliminate 10,000 U.S. jobs. Other affected companies have included Unisys Corp., Control Data Corp., Amdahl Corp., Bull HN Information Systems Inc., Wang Laboratories Inc. and Prime Computer.

Only a minute for a child to vanish

DEAR ABBY: I have read your column faithfully for years and have learned a lot from it. After reading today's paper, I just had to write. I have attached an article from this mornings newspaper telling about parents who left their two-month-old baby asleep in the backseat of their unlocked car at 8 p.m. while they shopped at a mall. They returned half an hour later to find their baby missing. The parents are offering $500 and the local radio station a $10,000 reward for information leading to the safe return of the baby.

Abby, I have stood beside cars watching unattended children until their parents returned. I would never forgive myself if I had left and something happened to those children.

Please print this message for parents: You have an obligation to protect your children from harm – and you have no right to leave them alone for 10 seconds! If you have shopping to do, take the child with you – or one day you may not have that option.

LOVES CHILDREN

DEAR LOVES CHILDREN: Thanks for caring enough to write. Your message might remind some parents to think twice before leaving their child unattended in a parked car for "only a few minutes."

DEAR ABBY: I can top Mrs. M.M. Kelly, whose husband was born in 1910 at St. Francis de Sales Hospital in Smith Falls, Ontario, Canada. The total bill was $16.75. (They gave her a 75-cent discount for cash).

Well, I was born Dec. 6, 1968 at the U.S. Naval Hospital in Quantico, VA. (My father was in the U.S. Marine Corps. at the time).

My mother's bill was $7! I'm told that this was to cover the cost of meals while she was in the hospital – a total of five days. I am enclosing a copy of the receipt.

■ Jeans commercials showing Marla Maples dumping two supermarket tabloids into a trash can have been banned from CBS and NBC.

The 15-second spots feature Maples, rumored to be Donald Trump's mistress, in a pastoral setting wearing No Excuses jeans and holding copies of the National Enquirer and Star. An Enquirer headline reads: "Trump Mistress Close to Suicide."

"The most important thing we can do today is clean up our planet. And I'm starting with these," Maples says as she tosses the papers. "Things look better already."

Beth Bressan, a CBS vice president in charge of program practices, said the ad was rejected as "unduly disparaging towards those newspapers."

"Our longstanding policy is not to sell ad time for the airing of private disputes," said Rick Gitter, NBC vice president of ad standards.

Neil Cole, president of New Retail Concepts, which makes the jeans, said he doubted his company would change the commercials.

ABC hasn't made a decision on the spots. The Fox network and the Turner Broadcasting System have decided to air the ads beginning Aug. 15

■ Dimitrios I, spiritual leader of 250 million Eastern Orthodox Christians, visited Niagara Falls as part of his monthlong tour of the United States.

The 75-year-old patriarch leaned against a railing Wednesday and gazed at Horseshoe Falls.

Dimitrios I did not mention the falls in either of his public addresses in upstate New York. But American Orthodox leaders said visiting the cataract had been his dream since childhood.

"All the Europeans, they dream someday to see these phenomena," said Bishop Timotheos of Detroit, whose diocese includes upstate New York.

Later in the day the patriarch went to Boston, the final stop on the first ever U.S. visit by a holder of his office. Dimitrios I has sought to bridge the gap between the Greek and other national Orthodox churches in the United States.

■ Singer John Denver has helped set up an institute in Aspen, Colo., on saving the environment.

Denver said the Aspen Institute on Global Change aims to bring together researchers and people who want to get involved at the local level.

Saving the environment is "the most important task that faces the human race at this time," Denver said at a news conference Wednesday.

The institute will be co-sponsored by the Amway Corp. of Ada, Mich., the U.N. Environment Program and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Amway's chief operating officer, William Nicholson, said the direct-marketing company has committed $500,000 to the institute over the next five years. NASA said it contributed $40,000.

■ Brenda Feigen, co-founder of Ms. Magazine and producer of the movie "Navy SEALS," says she did her part to improve the action film's portrayal of women.

"Navy SEALS," starring Charlie Sheen, features the elite force of highly trained Navy teams fighting terrorists.

"I think it is feminist, humanist to hate terrorism. It is natural and logical," Feigen said.

Feigen concedes she was concerned about the portrayal of women in the Orion release. She runs the production company that made the film.

"There were scenes with the role of Claire (co-star Joanne Whalley-Kilmer) that made no sense ... and in one instance there was a reference to her so obscene I can't even repeat it," she said. "I said this has to go."

Her next project is more directly tied to her past work with the American Civil Liberties Union and the women's movement — a made-for-TV movie about two black girls in the South sterilized against their will.

Smart diet habits for hiatal hernia

DEAR DR. GOTT: I'm a 37-year-old female with a hiatal hernia. At times, I have difficulty swallowing and am interested in knowing if there are foods I should avoid. Can the hernia get larger? How often should I have it checked?

DEAR READER: Hiatal hernia is a weakness of the diaphragmatic opening through which the esophagus passes from the chest into the stomach. This weakness often permits irritating gastric acid to backwash into the esophagus, leading to heartburn, indigestion and dysphagia (difficulty swallowing).

This last symptom is probably caused by reflex contractions of the esophagus that interfere with the normal coordinated actions of swallowing. You may be helped by prescription anti-spasmodic medicine, such as beladonna/phenobarbital, taken at regular intervals before eating.

Antacids, such as Maalox and Gelusil, may relieve your symptoms by neutralizing gastric acid before it has a chance to burn the esophageal lining and trigger spasm. Also, drugs (such as Tagamet or Zantac) to reduce the flow of stomach acid may alleviate your discomfort.

In my experience, no across-the-board prohibition of certain foods is necessary. Patients with hiatal hernia learn by trial-and-error which edibles to avoid, but this is highly individualized. Many patients experience discomfort eating dry food or citrus; other people can consume spices, such as chili and curry, without difficulty. I advise you to avoid foods that produce symptoms — and check with your doctor about the medicines I mentioned.

Hiatal hernias enlarge during the aging process, as tissues in general become increasingly inelastic. Nonetheless, most patients can control their symptoms without surgery, which is reserved for hernias that are large or continue to cause problems despite medical therapy. You do not need to have your hiatal hernia checked unless you experience continuing symptoms.

DEAR DR. GOTT: There's a great deal of information provided on keeping your eyes healthy. Do you have any guidelines?

DEAR READER: Your eyes will stay healthy by themselves, providing you take care of them. Use adequate light for fine work, avoid reading in the sun, protect your eyes from prolonged exposure to ultraviolet light, use safety lenses or goggles when operating dangerous machinery, and see an ophthalmologist for any symptoms, including pain or change in visual acuity.

As a general rule, people over the age of 50 should have regular eye examinations to check for glaucoma and cataracts.

CHECK LISTINGS FOR EXACT TIME

Weicker submits signatures for nomination

By PETER VILES
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — When the Republicans and the Democrats trooped to Hartford to hold their conventions earlier this month, independent gubernatorial candidate Lowell P. Weicker Jr. said his convention would be held in the streets.

On Wednesday, he brought the results of his convention to the state Capitol. The 8,217 nominating petitions containing more than 105,000 nominating signatures are ten times the number he needed to get his name on the November ballot.

Weicker submitted the signatures to the secretary of the state's office after giving a fiery, populist-style speech to about 250 supporters gathered on the lawn of the state Capitol.

Weicker called the signature-gathering drive "the biggest convention of all," and said it proved that "There is no more monopoly in the state of Connecticut on politics."

"Simply put, the people of the state of Connecticut are saying to the Republicans and the Democrats ... enough," he said. "This time it's our turn."

Known during his three terms in the Senate as a liberal Republican, a maverick and a loner, Weicker lost narrowly in 1988 to Democrat Joseph Lieberman. Weicker, 59, came out of political retirement in March to seek the governor's office as an independent.

"I've heard it said that Lowell Weicker's a loner," he said. "Well, I might be alone, but I've got 105,000 other people with me."

Under state law, Weicker needed just 9,937 nominating signatures, equal to 1 percent of the voters who cast ballots in the 1986 gubernatorial election.

Weicker said the 105,431 signatures his campaign gathered set a state record for the most ever gathered by a candidate for statewide office. The signatures must be approved by local town clerks and the secretary of the state before Weicker officially wins a spot on the ballot.

Weicker is running as a member of "A Connecticut Party," a name chosen partly to ensure that his name will appear first on the ballot after the two major parties.

Clad in shirt sleeves and surrounded by his family, Weicker repeatedly criticized the two-party system and promised a clean campaign.

"It's our turn to bring Connecticut together rather than to save your party ... It's our turn to say, 'Take the verbal political garbage and stow it.'"

He won the loudest applause when he promised, "I don't want to be your governor if it's dirt that's required to get into the governor's chair."

He also criticized the Republican Party for adopting a platform that contains a sentence blaming Democratic policies for the fatal stabbing of a 9-year-old girl by an escaped mental patient.

"When I saw that part of the Republican platform," Weicker said, "all I could say was, 'shame.'"

U.S. Rep. Bruce Morrison, a Democratic candidate for governor, first raised the issue Monday, when he called on Republican gubernatorial candidate John G. Rowland to disassociate himself from the section of the platform.

But Rowland refused, and State Republican Chairman Richard Foley defended the platform.

The Associated Press

VIEWING THE NUMBER — Former U.S. Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., right, smiles as he watched Luci McKinniey hold up a sign showing the number of petition signatures gathered to get him on the ballot as an independent candidate for governor of Connecticut. Weicker is a former three-term Republican U.S. Senator.

NASA holds hearings on Hubble's flawed mirror

By JANET L. CAPPIELLO
The Associated Press

DANBURY — Secret testimony at a Danbury optics company may reveal to NASA investigators what caused a focusing defect in the $1.5 billion Hubble Space Telescope.

A seven-member NASA team, led by Lew Allen, director of NASA's jet propulsion laboratory, is scheduled to hold its second day of closed hearings today at Hughes-Danbury Optical Systems, Inc. The telescope's mirrors were made at the company over a decade ago when it was a subsidiary of Perkin-Elmer Corp.

Thomas Arconti, spokesman for Hughes-Danbury, said Wednesday no information relating to the investigation would be released while the probe was underway.

A news release on the team's progress would be handed out from Washington today, said NASA spokeswoman Sarah Keegan.

NASA scientists have said the flaw in the $1.5 billion telescope will cut the Hubble's abilities in half and can only be partly corrected through a space mission scheduled for 1993.

The Hubble has two mirrors, a main mirror and a secondary mirror. NASA scientists have said the problem appeared to be a spherical aberration, a problem in the shape of the primary mirror.

The Hartford Courant reported Wednesday that scientists may have discovered that flaw in May 1981, but dismissed the evidence because they believed it was the result of a faulty testing apparatus.

One source, a retired Perkin-Elmer scientist, told the Courant that the 1981 test showed a possible spherical aberration in the main mirror, a 94-inch structure that NASA had called the smoothest large mirror in the world.

But the scientist, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the test results were assumed to be incorrect at the time because they contradicted tests done with an instrument thought to be more accurate.

"It's the smoking gun," the scientist said.

Perkin-Elmer built the mirrors between 1979 and 1982. Hundreds of employees put in more than four million hours of work on the project.

The company also built part of the telescope's guidance system.

The retired scientist said that despite the 1981 test results, additional testing did not appear necessary at the time. Those working on the mirror were under pressure to finish because of delays and cost overruns, he added.

"Time and money was always a factor at that point in the program," he said. "They were rushing to shut us down as fast as possible."

The company had originally been awarded a $63 million contract, but cost overruns left NASA with a total bill of $451 million.

Abe Offner, another retired Perkin-Elmer scientist who designed some of the mirrors' test equipment, told The Courant he didn't know of the test results and didn't think the tests were the problem.

"Why did they not do something about it?" Offner said Tuesday. "I don't know why it was not brought to my attention. I would have said, 'Let's check it out and see what the problem is.'"

Foster moms rally

HARTFORD (AP) — The Department of Children and Youth Services is not providing foster parents with enough money or support to care for troubled children properly, according to statements given at public hearings.

Foster mothers were among children's advocates attending the public hearings Wednesday before the legislative program review and investigations committee, which recently issued a report on DCYS. The hearings were the first in a series on the agency scheduled throughout the state.

Phyllis DeChello, a foster mother of two and director of the Professional Foster Care Association of Connecticut, said DCYS has rebuffed her organization's efforts at recruiting desperately needed foster parents.

She said the agency — which several years ago launched its own highly publicized campaign to recruit foster parents — now says it does not have the staff to license people who have applied to become foster parents.

DeChello and the other foster mothers at the hearings also said the agency inadequately trains foster parents to handle troubled children.

Ginnie Schwartz, who has adopted three foster children, said foster parents are often not reimbursed for emergency placements made through the state's 24-hour hot line for abuse cases, Care-Line.

"They open their home, often at 2 or 3 in the morning, feed, nurture and give these children bed space," DeChello said. "But if the child leaves within a certain amount of time there is no recognition and no payment."

Group studies ferry service

HARTFORD (AP) — A nonprofit group working to open access to the Connecticut River is studying the feasibility of running passenger-boat service to the state's capital.

Touting its plan as a possible solution to highway congestion, Riverfront Recapture Inc. says the small, shallow-draft boats that would travel the river during the warmer months may carry workers to the steps and ramps planned to link downtown with the river near the Founders Bridge.

The boats also could ferry tourists to the site of the new Science Museum of Connecticut, which plans to move to East Hartford from West Hartford. Or they might carry walkers or sightseers from downtown to other points on the riverfront park system that Riverfront Recapture hopes someday will hug the river in Hartford, East Hartford, Windsor and Wethersfield.

"It's a much more pleasant way to travel. You're getting out of the bumper-to-bumper traffic," said Joseph Marfuggi, executive director of Riverfront Recapture.

Republican urges House to expel Barney Frank

By JOHN DIAMOND
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A conservative Republican urged the House today to expel Rep. Barney Frank for his official actions on behalf of a male prostitute, but leading Democrats predicted Frank would escape with a reprimand.

Frank "is not who is on trial today," said Rep. William Dannemeyer, R-Calif., who proposed that the Massachusetts Democrat be expelled. "It is the House of Representatives who is on trial today."

The question, Dannemeyer said, is "do we tolerate, do we condone a member of this body who knowingly permits a house of prostitution to be operated out of his residence?"

The House ethics committee concluded that Frank was unaware of prostitution being conducted out of his Capitol Hill apartment by Stephen L. Gobie. Frank has admitted he fixed parking tickets and wrote a misleading memo for Gobie, whom the lawmaker hired as a personal aide with his own money.

Frank has said he would accept a reprimand — the mildest sanction available to the House.

The House took up Dannemeyer's expulsion motion first, with debate on lesser punishments of censure or reprimand to follow.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, members of the ethics committee, many fellow Democrats, and a homosexual rights group support Frank's position that a reprimand is appropriate.

Rep. John Myers of Indiana, the ranking Republican on the ethics committee, said he supported the reprimand recommendation and hoped the debate would not become partisan.

"This is a discipline matter," Myers said. "It isn't a party position. It isn't something that should be decided on a partisan basis. It's entirely too important for that."

Arrayed against him were House GOP Whip Newt Gingrich, wielding a censure proposal, and Dannemeyer, who says Frank should be expelled.

"Mr. Frank's presence in this body is a House standard that his conduct is permissible," Dannemeyer wrote in a letter to his colleagues prior to the start of debate. "No punishment which allows him to remain will negate this standard. Only Mr. Frank's permanent leave, his expulsion, will set a standard that his conduct is not permissible as a sitting member of Congress."

The debate on Frank's punishment comes a day after the Senate formally denounced Sen. Dave Durenberger, R-Minn., for "knowingly and willfully" violating its rules. The Senate ordered him to pay back up to $123,000 he received improperly.

Most of the money was for speaking fees he improperly kept during 1985 and 1985. Of the total, $29,050 plus interest was to be paid to the Senate for improper reimbursements Durenberger received while staying in his Minneapolis condominium during official trips from 1983-89.

The vote was 96-0, but many senators lined up to shake Durenberger's hand or embrace him afterward.

"No one in this chamber is approaching the vote lightly," said Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah. "The stones of denouncement are easier to cast than they are to retrieve."

Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., chairman of the Senate Ethics Committee, said, "The evidence of knowing and willful misconduct is clear and convincing and far more troubling than Sen. Durenberger's admitted negligence, lack of wisdom or asserted misplaced reliance on others," Heflin said.

Although the House was expected to at least reprimand Frank, his punishment was much more a matter of debate going into today's session than Durenberger's.

House Speaker Foley predicted Frank would survive the Republican moves to expel or censure him.

Governors will discuss tough educational goals

By TAMARA HENRY
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Five months after agreeing with President Bush on lofty goals to produce "an American renaissance in education," the nation's governors meet this weekend to decide who will oversee the task and how to assess students' progress toward that target.

The governors, traveling to Mobile, Ala., for the 82nd annual meeting of the National Governors' Association, hope to agree on the makeup of a bipartisan commission and its role in evaluating progress in reaching the six national education goals.

The governors also intend to decide how students should be tested and which learning skills should be measured.

While discussions began soon after the goals were outlined, Mike Cohen of the governors' association said this week a consensus still has not been reached on many details.

"There's no horrible impasse," said an association official who requested anonymity. "But building a consensus on anything is just not an easy process. ... These are not people who normally agree on a lot of things."

At stake are the goals Bush set forth in his State of the Union address in January. The governors, who met with the president last fall in an "education summit," gave their approval to the goals a month later.

Besides making American students "first in the world in math and science" by the year 2000, the goals call for improving student competence in English, history and geography; increasing the high school graduation rate to at least 90 percent; upgrading early childhood education; improving adult literacy and freeing schools of violence and drugs.

The governors are leaning toward organizing the commission along three tiers.

They would include a policy-steering group — possibly made up of governors — to oversee the student assessment process, an advisory group of high-level education specialists and business officials, and a staff to carry out the advisory group's recommendations.

Perhaps more contentious will be determining a way to measure student success in achieving the national goals.

Most states test students on their general academic knowledge. But decades of widely reported dismal results have forced educators to reassess the most commonly used testing and assessment methods.

Even within the Bush administration, there is disagreement on the meaning of standardized test scores. Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos released his department's annual "wall chart" of state-by-state performance reports over objections from the White House.

Thirty-two states test elementary pupils statewide, with the most popular tests being the California Achievement Test, the Stanford Achievement Test, the Metropolitan Achievement Test, the Science Research Associates Test, the Comprehensive Test of Basic Skills and the Iowa Test of Basic Skills.

The other 18 states allow local officials to pick the tests given to students in their district.

The National Council of Teachers of English has said repeatedly that standardized testing distorts and debases the language arts curriculum. Many people wrongly conclude that high scores on multiple-choice tests are proof of students' ability to use the language effectively in life and in learning, the group said.

If not standardized tests, what?

Several states are experimenting with innovative testing methods — most of which have been lumped under the category "performance-based testing." Such assessments can include teachers' evaluations of students' work based on collections of their essays, poems and drawings.

Soviet

Soviet economists, free to speak after decades of Cold War silence on such topics, say their nation's economic performance was far weaker than the CIA judged it to be.

And an analyst at the Defense Intelligence Agency said at a Senate hearing that the CIA "clearly understates" the share of the Soviet economy devoted to military expenditures.

William T. Lee, a longtime CIA critic, said that agency's methods are flawed and "likely to be as unreliable, and misleading, in the future as in the past."

But the CIA insists that essentially, it has been correct.

"I think we have done a very good job on a very complex issue," George Kolt, CIA director of Soviet analysis, said last week at the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing. "But that does not mean that our numbers are totally accurate. They are estimates that are most likely on the high side."

The current CIA estimate is that the Soviet gross national product amounts to 51 percent of that in the United States, which had a 1989 GNP of $4.2 trillion.

Michael J. Boskin, chairman of Bush's Council of Economic Advisers, said he thinks the Soviet GNP is about one-third that of the United States.

At a conference sponsored by the American Enterprise Institute in April, Soviet economists and statisticians offered even lower estimates. One Soviet official, Victor Belkin, said his nation's GNP could be as low as 14 percent of that in the United States, and no higher than 28 percent.

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., says the CIA estimates of Soviet economic strength and military capabilities in the mid-1970s led to the massive defense buildup that began when Jimmy Carter was president and accelerated under Ronald Reagan.

Moynihan said the Senate committee should look further into the consequences of government statistics about the Soviet Union.

"Would we have spent as much on our military during the 1980s if we had believed that the Soviet defense burden simply was not sustainable?" he asked. "I think not, and if I am correct, then this issue has been a momentous one for the state of the American economy."

Moynihan said that just as the United States was launching its military buildup, "Soviet economists were predicting disaster for their economy."

The CIA's Kolt said that while the agency considers its estimate of the defense burden generally accurate, the threat to the United States isn't represented by that number anyhow, but by Soviet weapons and forces.

And those are easier to count than economic statistics.

Defense spending accounts for about 6 percent of the U.S. gross national product. Kolt said the CIA had estimated that 15 to 17 percent of the Soviet gross national product has been going into military spending, although that has declined since last year.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said he thinks it is running at about 25 percent but doubts it will stay that high.

"Soviet military spending will decline as a matter of policy, and because it can't be sustained," he said. "... I think they are in a depression."

Nevertheless, Cheney said, the Soviet military is maintaining and modernizing its strategic forces. "That's what makes them a superpower and they won't give that up," he said.

Radiation

nary landfills.

Under the new policy, such low-level wastes as gloves, clothing, lab equipment and even buildings and equipment at nuclear power plants can be disposed of as if they were normal garbage if radiation doses are below a certain level.

The commission plans to consider exempting various wastes on a case-by-case basis as requests for exemptions are submitted by industry under the new policy guidelines.

NRC Chairman Kenneth M. Carr has argued that the policy change represents a way to save lives because federal and state regulators will be able "to spend our resources on threats that are more important."

But representatives from the EPA, a half-dozen members of Congress and a number of state radiation control officials were expected to testify against the NRC action, announced on June 27.

According to documents obtained by Miller's subcommittee, the EPA as well as key NRC staff members expressed concern repeatedly during the two years the new policy was being debated that too many wastes are being deregulated.

The NRC decision would exempt from special control wastes that subject individuals to radiation doses of less than 10 millirem per year — half the level of a normal chest X-ray.

"We believe that is too high a level (of exposure) for a blanket deregulation criteria and is not protective of the public health," the EPA's Office of Radiation Programs, concluded in a briefing paper submitted to the subcommittee. The EPA made similar arguments to the NRC before the policy change was made.

The EPA maintained that the 10 millirem cutoff for regulatory action could result in as many as three additional cancer deaths for every 10,000 people exposed. "Numerous standards established by the EPA, including those for drinking water, set upper limits of risk at lower levels," it said.

According to internal NRC memos and other documents, key commission staff members also expressed strong reservations about the 10 millirem cutoff level as the new policy was debated in 1988 and 1989.

A staff report in June 1988 urged that only wastes with radiation doses of 1 millirem per year be deregulated. Among those who objected to the 10 millirem cutoff was Robert M. Bernero, acting director of the NRC's Office of Nuclear Material Safety and Safeguards, according to the documents.

Bernero in one memo to his NRC superiors expressed concern about the health effects to individuals who may be subject to numerous exposures of such wastes and the long-term effect on such materials on the waste stream.

But the objections from Bernero and other staffers were overruled by senior NRC officials, the documents indicated.

The EPA later suggested the cutoff be set at 4 millirem per year, but that was rejected.

"In their zeal to relax the regulation of the nuclear industry, the NRC commissioners have ignored the objections of their own staff experts, the Environmental Protection Agency, the states and the public," said Miller.

The nuclear industry — as well as the NRC commissioners — have argued that the wastes that are at issue emit only extremely small doses of radiation.

Koreas

bolically significant.

Within an hour of the document's signing, however, the rival Koreas became embroiled in disagreements over housing and travel arrangements for five North Koreans who were to have crossed the border today for a two-day visit in Seoul to plan a Korea-wide rally for unification.

Eight hours after the crossing was to take place, it was effectively canceled. A communist official reportedly hung up the phone during a conversation with a South Korean official. Shortly thereafter, a North Korean radio broadcast blamed the south for blocking its delegates.

The Seoul government had insisted that the North Koreans stay in a luxury Seoul hotel. The North Koreans wanted to stay with South Korean dissidents at a church house — and travel in the dissidents' cars.

Three disappointed South Korean dissidents waiting as a welcoming party started chanting anti-government slogans. "Down with (President) Roh Tae-woo who blocks unification!" they shouted.

In Seoul, Unification Minister Hong Sung-chul issued a statement saying "all indications compel us to doubt if North Korea really had any intentions to make (the crossing and) the rally come off as scheduled."

He said "our door remains open."

Lee Hae-hak, one of three South Korean dissident leaders at Panmunjom, called it "a political show." He said cancellations of the North Koreans' visit would make it difficult to plan and hold the unification rally that had been planned for Aug. 15.

The five were to be the first civilians since a 1985 family exchange to cross the border with the approval of both governments.

Paik, the North Korean delegate, said if citizens on both sides of the border have difficulty in arranging the rally, "relations of the south and north would further deteriorate and it would have an irreparably bad impact on the holding of the high-level talks."

Proposed sites for the Aug. 15 rally include the capitals of either North or South Korea or Panmunjom.

The Koreas were divided after World War II. They fought a three-year civil war that ended in 1953 and have remained rivals since.

Their border is the most heavily fortified in the world, with more than 1.5 million armed men on either side.

South Korea offered last week to open its border to North Koreans for unrestricted travel for five days starting Aug. 13. It challenged North Korea to do the same for South Koreans.

The north has said it would open the border on a limited basis on Aug. 15 to Koreans desiring unification.

The two sides have become bogged down in a blitz of proposals and conditions, and it remains unclear whether there will be any crossings.

Aug. 15 is the 45th anniversary of the liberation of Korea from Japanese colonial rule. It is a sentimental holiday on both sides of the border.

Dear George,

My wife and I would like to thank you for your outstanding work in the remodeling of our kitchen. We had no trouble in selecting your company as you previously had remodeled both of our bathrooms and had done a superior job.

First, you were most helpful in helping us design our "new" kitchen. Then as the job progressed, you guided us and made adjustments as we saw what our needs were without a hassle. Your crew should be complimented for their excellent work. Both and Danny were most courteous and cooperative. They were responsible for the high quality that was the end result. Finally, you should be commended for setting a schedule and following it so that the end product was done on time.

We wish you great success in the expansion of your showroom on Broad Street.

Best wishes,
H. Blaine Miller

Dear Ray:

We would like to take this opportunity to let you know how happy we are with the remodeling of our kitchen and bathroom, which you recently completed.

We have the additional storage space that we wanted in the kitchen, and the almost-total renovation of the bathroom has achieved the lighter, more modern look that we had wanted. We are very pleased with the overall appearance, quality of workmanship and attention to detail reflected in every aspect of the job.

Equally important as the end-result, however, has been the overall experience of dealing with you and your men. During the entire planning process, you yourself were most helpful, patient and cooperative. And the actual construction process was not nearly as disruptive as we had anticipated. Your people were here when they said they would be; they worked hard and were very accommodating and cooperative throughout; they took pride in their work, and were careful to clean up at the end of each day; and the whole process was well-planned, organized and coordinated, so that the entire construction time was productively used. Having heard "horror-stories" from friends about their experiences with contractors and having approached the entire project with considerable apprehension, we were delighted at the minimal disruption that, in fact, occurred.

We appreciate very much the role you played in making all this go so smoothly, and we look forward to working with you again.

Sincerely yours,
W. and Sharon Van Hoek

Home furnishings: city house

By BARBARA MAYER
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — In big cities like New York where most people live in apartments, the perennial desire is for just a few feet more of closet space. Having space to squander is the greatest luxury of all.

Burton Kassell has plenty of closets and more than enough rooms in his five-story limestone-front home on the upper west side of Manhattan. But he has discovered that space alone is not enough.

Recently, after 19 years of solving one decorating problem at a time, piecemeal, he hired designer Rivka Schoenfeld to reduce the confusion by working out a better floor plan. At the same time, he asked her to help him weed out furnishings and collectibles and to redecorate some of the rooms.

Built as a private family home at the turn of the century, the house had been turned into eight apartments when Kassell bought it in 1971. He and his wife and children lived on one floor, and the other four floors were divided into seven apartments. Over the years, as tenants moved out and his finances improved, Kassell took over additional floors for his own use until by the end of 1987, he had the whole building to himself.

He wanted to create a separate apartment for each of two grown children, ages 25 and 21, a weekend home for two other children by a second marriage, ages 12 and 10, as well as a three-story space for himself.

Considering the changes over the years, it's hardly surprising that when Schoenfeld first saw the house, her reaction was, "It's a mess.

"The proportions and ambience of the building were Victorian and heavy. We wanted to pierce this heaviness with actual physical light and a feeling of openness and space," she says.

With this goal in mind, Kassell and Schoenfeld chose a middle course between restoration and modernization. They wanted to keep a turn-of-the-century feeling without disguising its use as a 20th-century home.

Schoenfeld suggested plain plastered walls painted white. Moldings that were not authentic to the orginal house were removed, and ceilings were replastered. Much of the work was basic improvement and renovation, like the upgraded electrical system. Track lighting was installed, as was stereo equipment, a multi-room control system, and a security system. All seven fireplaces in the house were put into working order.

Since there was so much wood — floors, wainscoting, some moldings and built-in cabinetry — Schoenfeld suggested furnishings made of other materials such as glass and steel, for contrast.

In the living room, for example, seating is covered in white fabric. The coffee table is steel, and the only other significant furniture in the room is a low metal-framed piece with open shelving along the wall opposite the fireplace. There are stone shelves below and a glass shelf at waist level, where Kassell displays collectibles and memorabilia and stores sound equipment and books.

Not every room conveys the same feeling. While the living room projects a contemporary ambience, the dining room is more traditional in mood. Oak wainscoting, eight and a half feet high, forms a backdrop to the large dining table designed by Gustav Stickley of the turn-of-the-century American arts and crafts movement. To provide counterpoint, a large modern lighting fixture hangs directly over the table.

The kitchen, which had been redone 10 years earlier, did not need to be touched. This pleasing room wears its past and present with distinction. By removing many layers of accumulated paint, Kassell exposed the kitchen's original honey-color oak cabinetry, and a carpenter matched some new sections to it. A cabinet from a butler's pantry was a gift from neighbors during their own renovation. Butcher block countertops, tile flooring and a restaurant stove give this room an old-fashioned and romantic feel.

Space and quality materials work together to make the 10- by 20-foot master bath perhaps the most luxurious in the house. The gleaming and expansive white-tiled room has a wall of new windows, a separate shower, whirlpool bath, and a freestanding sink. Kassell says the room is in some ways his favorite because he was able to create more of it. The other rooms were already complete, and only minor changes could be made.

Living in a private home in a big city is not without problems. "You are your own super and are responsible for all the maintenance, and it's difficult, costly and frustrating to get things repaired," says Kassell. Yet, it offers "the luxury of space, the feeling of home, a basement for all your junk."

The monetary value of the house and the neighborhood have both risen substantially since he bought the property for $74,500, says Kassell.

You can let you children have a free hand in decorating their own rooms (without creating havoc) with Decorate-It! kits, featuring themed appliques that stick on walls the same way as Post-it notes. Themes include Fun For All, which coordinates with By The Dream Machine accessories; The Lost West, with dinosaurs and cowpokes; The Voo Zoo, a magical menagerie; Hares & Bears, with teddy bears and bunnies floating on puffy clouds; Prairie Tales, visual puns with desert animals; and Sea-nanigans, featuring the educated dolphin Miss Quote, an in-depth teacher at the School of Fish.

If you like real English dinnerware but aren't financially ready to move up to expensive china or earthenware, you may find budget ironstone dinnerware from Kane Industries an affordable alternative. Made in Stoke-on-Trent, the capital of the English Potteries district, the line comes in traditional country scenic, floral and willow patterns. Prices range from between $35 and $50 for 20-piece sets. They're available at food, discount, drug and specialty stores.

Aluminum outdoor furniture from Tropitone's Focus collection echoes the curves of bentwood in its chairs, chaises and tables. Sleek triple-tube construction of powdered, rust-free aluminum is paired with either European or modified cartridge cushions in the designs: Hibiscus, Jacaranda, and Mariposa. This family of designs can be mixed. Mariposa uses a classic inverted "U" design, while Jacaranda has a two-thirds crescent shape mounted on sled-like runners. Hibiscus is more angular, with rectangular side panels that frame decorative sweeps. Tabletops are offered in either acrylite or tempered glass.

Beautiful crystal is literally back off the shelf these days.

"Suddenly, we're discovering that even a glass of tap water tastes better in crystal," says interior designer Marshall Watson, who observes that many people like to show off their crystal barware and decanters on silver platters. Barware in particular has enjoyed a revival of popularity, according to Carolyn Ingham of Cien, a company that makes hand-cut crystal. What's more, she says, people like to use it every day. "People today don't want their crystal to sit in cabinets while they hope for the Queen Mother to drop by."

Home furnishings: Irish crystal

By The Associated Press

To connoisseurs, elegant lead crystal means Ireland, where mouth-blown, full-lead pieces have been made for centuries.

Irish crystal does come dear, but a relatively young Irish company, Tipperary Crystal, offers a line that equals the quality of the famous Waterford but sells for about 30 percent less.

According to Bernadette Ryan, who owns the Grafton Shoppe in New York City and the Irish Shoppe in Block Island, R.I., the crystal is one of the best-selling lines at these two Irish crafts stores.

"My customers buy it for special occasions, especially for weddings and anniversaries," she says. It also is much more readily available than Waterford, she adds. Many of the pieces are engraved, either with initials or with dedications for special events, "a nice alternative to silver."

Tipperary might be considered a lineal descendent of Waterford, since it is run by a group of former Waterford craftsmen who formed the new company in the wake of Waterford's restructuring a little over two years ago. A leader of the group, Joseph Foley, was a 24-year Waterford veteran who took advantage of a restructuring buyout option and found a backing partner to start the company. The group makes crystal the traditional way by mouth-blowing, then hand-cutting each individual piece. The lead content is over 33 percent, which gives the crystal strength, durability and imparts a slight bluish color. Cutting serves the same function as faceting in gems, adding sparkle and iridescence.

Pooling money, time for co-op

By RICHARD MERTENS
The Associated Press

DEERING, Mass. — Among the early decisions facing members of the Dudley Brook Cooperative was what to do about the garden. Should they garden together, in the spirit of their enterprise? Or separately, as relief from it? There were good arguments on both sides.

"You'd be surprised at what generates a lot of conversation," said Rick Mechaber, a 27-year-old geologist. The Dudley Brook Cooperative was founded in December at an old horse farm on East Deering Road. Four couples pooled $40,000 for a down payment on 42 acres and buildings — a barn, a main house and a carriage house. They became not only joint owners of a farm but companions in a kind of social experiment. They're something less than a household, but more than neighbors. How much more is hard to say.

"I think we're still finding that balance between how much we do individually," said Don Bruggmann, the 30-year-old manager of the State Street Food Cooperative.

The Dudley Brook Cooperative grew out of considerations both practical and philosophical. The main practical consideration was that none of the four couples could afford to buy a house, much less a farm. Like housing cooperatives in Franklin and Concord, the cooperative made home ownership affordable. More than that, it was an attempt to create a small community.

"I didn't want to live in a single-family house with a white picket fence," said John Hamilton, 28, the coordinator of the Concord Area Trust for Community Housing. "We can all accomplish more working together."

The cooperative is not a commune. "It's not hippies and free love," Bruggmann said. Each couple, who collectively have one child and several dogs, lives in a separate apartment. They approached the cooperative with less utopianism and more hard sense than some who have attempted more-radical social experiments. But Dudley Brook draws from some of the same idealism that animated the communards of the 1960's: the desire for a better way of life, a new social contract.

"It's a kind of a mixture of practicality and idealism," Bruggmann said. "We set out to make things work, but mostly to back up our ideals."

The beginnings of the cooperative go back a year and a half. Two young couples from Concord, Bruggmann and Marjorie Waters, and Hamilton and Krista Helmboldt, learned of a farm for sale in Deering. At the time, they were in a predicament common among young couples. They liked the idea of owning a home but could not afford one.

Their interest in cooperative living varied. As director of the housing trust, Hamilton was committed both professionally and personally to it. But Helmboldt, who is 26 and works for The Nature Conservancy, was more skeptical.

"My initial reaction was, 'No way,'" she said. "The thought of sharing a living space for a long period of time did not appeal to me. I had lived like that for a short period of time. But when I was going to settle down and have my own family, I wanted my privacy."

Helmboldt warmed to the idea. The farm was lovely, and the buildings had already been divided into apartments. Last summer, they found two couples to join them.

They bought the farm Dec. 1 for $225,000 and moved in the same day.

The decision to go ahead with the purchase — and the cooperative — was a hard one. Buying a home is traumatic even for one couple; four couples multiplied the anguish.

"It was quite an intense period," said 26-year-old Iain MacLeod, who works for the New Hampshire Audubon Society.

Members agreed to have the cooperative became a legal entity of which each couple bought a share; the money formed the down payment for the farm. In addition, each couple would pay a monthly rent ranging from $500 to $900, depending on the apartment they lived in. If a couple left, it would receive what it had put into the property, but no more. Cooperative housing was not meant to be an investment.

They also spent a long time discussing the social arrangements. Some leaned toward a tighter community; others valued their privacy. In the end they decided not to eat together, nor to have a common room. "I had to have my own refrigerator," said Waters, a 32-year-old bibliographer.

Objects for home decor

By The Associated Press

The collectibles you move in with may contribute as much to the decor as the paint, wallpaper, rugs and drapes. Pictures, boxes, or objets d'art may capture the eye first and determine a room's character.

Frames evoking classic styles like Victorian ceramics, Parisian silver, or sculptured Italian or Russian designs in a variety of metals that have been burnished, painted, or mirrored are offered by Dakin Teragrafics. "Not only have picture frames regained their elegance, evoking a time when photos of family members were a novelty and placed in intricately crafted silver casings, they have recently inspired a veritable explosion of new designs and materials," says Joseph E. Walsmith, the firm's president.

Fabric styles that are similar to English chintz designs, by I Was Framed, cover picture frames and are available with matching boxes for jewelry, hats, cosmetics, dishes, and other collectibles, as well as tissue dispensers, wastebaskets, albums, notebooks, music boxes and similar items. Most of the designs are florals, but the line also includes moires in pink or black.

Gallery and Art Nouveau styles, including a number of architecturally inspired frames based on the work of Scottish designer Charles Rennie Mackintosh, are offered through the Exposures catalog. Also available are archival storage and display systems for incurable collectors of photos and oddments, including glass-covered cases and museum-style tables in which to display favorite baubles. For information or catalogs, call 1 (800) 222-4947.

From Diane Von Furstenberg comes frames, desk accessories and paper tableware in bold animal prints. Her Nairobi collection features abstracts of leopard, tiger and zebra patterns on picture frames, address books, journals, albums, letter holders, stationery, paper plates, napkins and invitations.

Keep your lawn looking good

By POPULAR MECHANICS
The Associated Press

A well-manicured yard is a pleasure to look at, but it takes a lot of work. So, most of us opt for a simple landscape that we can keep in shape without daily care.

One easy-upkeep way to give a crisp look to lawn and planting beds is to make a clear separation between them with edging. Edging helps keep creeping plants in place and defines planting areas even when plants are dormant. Sunk so its top surface is nearly flush with the ground, it serves as a lawnmower base. You can wheel your mower over it and eliminate hand trimming.

There are many different types of edging made of wood or masonry. Strip-edging of metal or plastic combined with a bed of tree bark or stone aggregate also looks neat and requires minimal maintenance. In selecting an edging material, weigh appearance, cost and ease of installation.

Wood edging is a very easy material to install. Redwood is the most readily available wood that is naturally decay resistant. When wood is in contact with the ground, use all-heart redwood (solid-colored with no light streaks of sapwood in it). An 8-foot-long 2-by-4 can cost from $5 to $7. All-heart cedar is also naturally decay resistant, although it may be a little more difficult to find in lumber yards.

To install 2-by-4 edging, first drive stakes into the ground at each end of your run. Then, stretch a string taut between the stakes for use as a guide in excavating. Use a straight spade to cut a 5½-inch-deep, clean-sided trench. Shovel in a 2-inch bed of sand; this helps level the edging and realign it after winter when the ground heaves due to freezing and thawing. Install 2-by-4s, top edge flush with the ground, and secure them with 1- by 2- by 18-inch stakes positioned every 4 feet. Nail to the edging with hot-dipped, galvanized nails.

Softwood timbers that have been pressure-treated with preservative make excellent edging. Be sure to get stock designated for ground-contact use as not all treated wood serves this purpose.

Sink large wood timbers directly into the ground or on a 2-inch bed of sand. To determine your needs, multiply length by width by depth in feet or fractions of a foot to work out the number of cubic feet of sand.

The bathroom as a status symbol

By The Associated Press

It is the room of many euphemisms: The powder room, cloakroom, john or loo. Whatever you call it, the American bathroom has become a status symbol, fueling a $12 billion-a-year business, according to the National Kitchen and Bath Association.

"Quite a few of the bath layouts we show are larger than my entire apartment," says Timothy Drew, editor of House Beautiful's Kitchens and Baths editions. He observes that the numbers and kinds of bathroom equipment have dramatically increased in the past few years.

"People like baths that are romantic, comfortable, even exotic, partly because they spend so much time there," says Scott Dee, who with his wife Jan owns Studio Bath in Newport, Calif.

Dee says that even one of his supplier's catalogs offers a pick of more than 4,000 colors, finishes and styles in bathroom fixtures. And there are over 100 kinds of shower heads. "We can install a series covering every part of the bather from head to toe."

Engineering advances have reduced the familiar sound of a dripping faucet, he adds; many designs have only one moving part.

"Bath design has become a highly specialized business," says Dee. "We work closely with consumers, architects and outside designers to put together the proper fixtures, colors, spacings and other aspects of the customized bath."

His biggest job so far has been a 500-square-foot master bath with seven-foot carved glass shower and toilet-bidet doors, with a six-foot double tub illuminated from beneath. The remodelling cost $60,000.

School board revises no-smoking regulation

By NANCY FOLEY
Manchester Herald

MANCHESTER — Trying to enforce a ban on smoking during school trips and Board of Education activities would be just too difficult, Board of Education members have decided.

The proposed smoking policy, which the school board will vote on at the end of August, has been revised to limit the ban only to school property and vehicles.

The proposed policy reads, "It shall be the policy of the Board of Education that no smoking or other use of tobacco products be allowed on school property at any time or on any transportation provided by the Board of Education.

A phrase "or on any trip or activity sponsored by the Board of Education" has been deleted, according to Richard A. Cormier, director of special education and pupil personnel. He said he rewrote the policy at the bequest of Gloria DellaFera, head of the school board's policy committee.

Democrat Susan Perkins, a supporter of the ban, said that the school board recognized that it would be too difficult to monitor teachers and other employees when they are on extended field trips.

Several school board members smoked at a Board of Education retreat held on July 16 at the Quality Inn in Vernon. Although such activity would have been prohibited under the old policy, it would be allowed under the new policy.

Though questions had been raised as to whether the ban could be enforced during school events such as football games and concerts, that section of the policy remains intact.

Perkins, however, indicated that it would not be vigorously enforced.

"I think the best you can do when you have non-school related events is to post it (the policy) and hope that adults will follow what the sign says."

Cormier said that another section of the proposed policy, having to do with enforcement, has been changed. Originally, the proposed policy said the superintendent is charged with developing regulations to enforce the ban. Cormier said that the regulations do not need to be developed because labor contracts already detail how infractions of rules should be handled.

Currently, teachers and other employees are allowed to smoke only in designated areas of the school. In May, the superintendent told the school board that some of the areas needed to be changed. At that time, the school board, with the exception of Democrat Francis Maffe, said it wanted a total ban.

Dems charge endorsement of Barrett is invalid

By ALEX GIRELLI
Manchester Herald

MANCHESTER — Democratic Town Chairman Theodore Cummings has questioned the validity of the Republican endorsement of Leo J. Barrett as a candidate to the judge of probate office in Manchester.

Cummings said this morning he understands the GOP committee meeting July 18 at which Barrett was endorsed was sparsely attended, and he says he does not think a quorum of the committee was present.

John Garside, Republican town chairman, said early this morning that he thinks the local party rules do not require a quorum for endorsements of candidates, but simply a majority of those present.

He said he was planning to check with the local committee's parliamentarian, attorney Geoffrey Naah. Naab was present at the July 18 meeting.

Garside said he will also check with the Republican State Central Committee on the question.

The meeting was held on the same night as the 1st Congressional District Republican convention and a number of delegates to the convention arrived late to the local meeting.

The endorsement vote was taken before the delegates arrived.

Cummings said that if the endorsement was invalid, as he suspects it was, the local Republican Party will have to submit a nomination petition for Barrett, as they will have to do if they propose candidates for state representative in Manchester's Assembly Districts 12 and 13.

The need for petition candidates for those two districts arose because the Republican missed a July 24 deadline for endorsements.

No Republican candidates for the two posts, now held by Democrats James McCavanagh, 12th district, and John Thompson, 13th district, both seeking re-election, have been named publicly. Garside has said potential candidates are being considered.

The Republican failure to make the endorsement by the deadline was brought up by Cummings at a meeting of the Democratic Town Committee Tuesday when the Democrats endorsed the candidacies of McCavanagh, Thompson, and Probate Judge William FitzGerald who is seeking reelection.

Garside said the confusion over endorsements of the representative candidates arose because he and Town Clerk Edward Tomkiel were given misinformation by officials of Elections Division in the office of the Secretary of the State and that he was misinformed by representatives of the Republican State Central Committee.

Cummings said this morning that both political parties receive notices on election schedules from the secretary of the state, which keeps the parties informed about deadlines. He said the Democratic State Central Committee also keeps local Democratic Party chairmen informed and he believes the Republican State Central Committee does the same.

"I don't understand why they can't get it together unless they feel they can make their own rules," Cummings said of the local Republicans.

He said the rules under which the Republican majority conducts meetings of the Board of Directors, "leave a lot to be desired."

Agoraphobics not afraid of meetings — or jokes

By RICK SANTOS
Manchester Herald

MANCHESTER — Although they've heard the same smart-aleck joke all too often, members of a support group for agoraphobics say it makes more sense to retain one's sense of humor than to react testily.

To the layman, the word agoraphobia has come to mean a mental condition that makes someone afraid to leave their home. And the punch-line of the wise-guy joke relates to the difficulty in successfully gathering agoraphobics for a support-group meeting.

"You've got to have a sense of humor," says Bonnie Nicol, associate director of education and advocacy for the Mental Health Association of Connecticut.

However, Nicol says agoraphobia is a serious problem, as it can affect a person's work, social life, and family.

And a lot of the joking, she says, is because the condition is often misunderstood.

"Everyone thinks that agoraphobia means you can't leave your home, but that's not the case," she says.

Rather a more common example of the condition, which rears itself in anxiety attacks, is fear of going into grocery stores or fear of driving over bridges.

In many cases the anxiety associated with such fears will lead an agoraphobic to fear leaving home.

But Nicol says the support groups are not designed for people whose problems are so severe that they cannot leave home; that person most likely needs individual professional attention.

The cause of agoraphobia is not known, but it most typically is detected during adulthood after a victim suffers one or more panic attacks.

The agoraphobic will often mistakenly associate the attack with a place, and then develop an irrational fear of that place. It may be their car or a grocery store.

So then when they go back to such a place, the fear is so strong that they are likely to work themselves into another attack.

"The whole basis is that you're afraid of having an anxiety attack," Nicol said.

As the coordinator of the agoraphobic support groups, she has heard of all types and levels of fear.

Citing what she called an extreme example, she said, "I know of one kid where the police had to go to his home and take him to school."

Two groups, which meet weekly in Manchester, are not only attended by agoraphobics, but run by agoraphobics.

A local woman who wished to remain anonymous conducted one of the two groups that meet at the Concordia Lutheran Church at 40 Pitkin St.

She describes the meetings as discussions in which people share information about some of the problems they've had and some of the problems they will soon face.

The woman, who has been with the group for about 10 years, says the peer support offered by the group is significant.

"If you have a fear of waiting at a stop light and you tell your average person, they say, 'uh huh,' but people in the group [understand]."

There are 14 such groups in Connecticut, and Nicol says, "It's not a bunch of people sitting around saying, 'oh poor me.'"

Rather, she said, members teach each other skills to cope with the condition.

The first method, called exposure therapy, is to have the person imagine themselves being in the situation which causes fear. When they start to become nervous, they instructed to stop.

Then they go through a series of relaxation exercises. Then they will repeat the process until they have imagined the entire frightening scenario.

The second technique, called in vivo (in life) therapy, is to actually have the person confront whatever it is they fear. So if they fear, for example, driving over bridges, then they may first ride over a bridge with a friend who is driving.

Then they would attempt to drive with the friend as the passenger. And then they may try having the friend drive behind in a separate car. Then the person would try to meet the friend at the other side of the bridge.

Nicol says the process is gradual and is far more easily said than done.

Such therapy, along with peer support and sometimes medication, can help agoraphobics to contain the condition, she says.

People who want more information the condition or who are interested in attending support-group meetings should call the Mental Health Association at 529-1970.

Injured youth doing well

By RICK SANTOS
Manchester Herald

MANCHESTER — Seventeen-year-old Brian McGuire, who suffered serious injuries last week when he jumped off a bridge into a rocky brook 30 feet below, was released from St. Francis Hospital Tuesday and today is home and doing well.

McGuire's friend, Jason Holmes, who also jumped off the bridge but did not suffer serious injury, visited McGuire Wednesday.

Holmes said McGuire, who injured his backbone and internal organs, was up and walking around. Doctors originally suspected he had head injuries.

He declined to answer further questions, saying that the past few days have been difficult. Attempts to reach McGuire, who lives at 66K Spencer St., failed. Holmes, 18, lives at 29A Spencer St.

The accident happened early Friday morning when McGuire and Holmes were sitting on the bridge at Lookout Mountain in the Highland Park area.

The two had been drinking. When they saw a police car approach, they panicked and jumped off the bridge near the intersection of Spring Street and Glen Road.

McGuire was lifted from the rocks and up to the narrow, off-road bridge by Manchester paramedics and firefighters, who used a rescue basket and a pulling device. He then was rushed to St. Francis Hospital by Life Star helicopter.

Holmes received only minor injuries and was treated and released from Manchester Memorial Hospital.

While there, he told police the two had drunk a couple of beers in his car, parked at 5 Glen Road. They panicked when they saw a car, which turned out to be police, approaching them.

Upon reaching the bridge, they did not realize how far the drop was. They jumped on the west side, about 30 feet. The other side would have been about a 6-foot drop into mud.

No charges have been filed against the boys.

Sewage treatment upgraded

By RICK SANTOS
Manchester Herald

MANCHESTER — The first phase of a three-phase, $28 million project to upgrade the town's sewage treatment plant was successfully completed early this morning, Water and Sewer Administrator Robert Young said today.

During a seven-hour system shut-down, which extended from late Wednesday night to the early hours of this morning, the sewer line for the northern part of town was linked with new primary treatment tanks. Before the hook-up, waste water from the line — one of the two major lines — had not received primary treatment, Young said.

"This is a major step," he said about the completion of the first phase. "There's no turning back in the project."

Phase two, the construction of new secondary treatment facilities, is scheduled to be completed by late September or early October. And phase three, the rehabilitation of existing secondary treatment facilities, is planned for completion in March.

Young said the work that needed to be done during the shut-down went smoothly and quickly than had been anticipated. Contractors, subcontractors, and town engineers had allowed about nine hours for the job, which entailed cutting the pipe and connecting it to the primary tanks.

The quality of the sewage output should be enhanced with the improvement of the purification process, Young said.

Parents gain right to tape meetings

MANCHESTER — A decision in a Colchester case giving parents the right to tape meetings involving the education of their handicapped children will not have a major effect in Manchester, according to Richard A. Cormier, director of special education and pupil personnel.

In the Colchester case, the Board of Education had refused to hold the meetings as long as the child's mother was going to tape them. The U.S. District Court for the District of Connecticut decided last week that the parents had the right to tape record the meetings.

Cormier said that parents in Manchester are allowed to tape such meetings, as long as everyone at the meeting is aware that it is being taped. The administration will also tape a meeting that is being recorded by a parent, he said.

Parents often want to tape the meetings so they will be able to review the meeting in order to ask questions they didn't think of at the time, he said. Or, one parent may tape a meeting for another, who cannot attend the meeting.

Rally for Lyme disease awarenss

By MELISSA B. ROBINSON
Manchester Herald Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Fifteen-year-old Stephanie Gordon of Bristol stood under a scalding sun in front of the Capitol Monday, holding above her head the intravenous unit that feeds her antibiotics.

"Compared to three years ago, I'm better, but I still have all my symptoms," said Gordon, who suffers from Lyme Disease. "I have chest pains like heart attacks."

Gordon, who turns 16 next month and is finishing her sophomore year in high school with the help of a tutor, contracted the illness, which is spread by ticks, three years ago.

She was among dozens of Lyme Disease sufferers, their families and friends who rallied at the Capitol Monday to mark the beginning of Lyme Disease Awareness Week and ask lawmakers for more federal funding for research, treatment and education efforts to combat the sickness.

Named for Lyme, Connecticut, where the first cases were reported, Lyme Disease is the second fastest-growing infectious disease in the nation, exceeded only by AIDS.

Although the illness has struck parts of Connecticut, New Jersey and New York particularly hard, cases have now been reported in 48 states.

"Lyme Disease is spreading throughout America, and more and more people are suffering from it," said Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., who led a group of lawmakers at the rally in calling for $5.6 million to establish a Lyme Disease research and education grant program at the Atlanta-based Centers for Disease Control.

A quarter of the funding, which is $3 million above this year's level, would go for public education projects on transmission and treatment.

Lieberman last week introduced a bill in the Senate to establish the grant program. A companion bill has been introduced in the House by Rep. George Hochbrueckner, D-N.Y.

Nationwide, more than 21,000 cases of Lyme Disease have been reported since 1982, more than 7,400 of which were reported last year alone, according to the office of Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-2nd Dist.

Gejdenson represents the eastern section of Connecticut, the part of the state that has been hardest hit by the sickness, and the region where the disease was discovered.

Statistics from the Centers show New York leading the nation with approximately 9,300 cases. About 2,300 cases have been confirmed in Connecticut.

Lawmakers, disease sufferers and doctors who spoke at the rally stressed that early detection is essential for effective treatment of the disease, which is usually not fatal but can cause a host of medical problems including paralysis, arthritic conditions and severe chest pains.

Slain girl's uncle asks for retraction

HARTFORD (AP) — The State Republican Party Chairman, continuing to defend a platform statement that blames the stabbing death of a 9-year-old Wallingford girl on Democratic policies, says he is sorry the girl's family is being pulled into the controversy.

On Wednesday, an uncle of Jessica Short called on the Republican Party to retract the controversial 11-word section of its platform that's drawn fire from politicians.

The uncle, Randell Short, appeared on an interview on WTNH-TV in New Haven. WTNH also quoted another unnamed family member as criticizing the platform statement.

But State Republican Chairman Richard Foley defended the platform and said he regretted that the Short family had been drawn into a political debate.

"We were referring to the criminal," he said. "We never referred to the young lady."

The preamble to the GOP platform, adopted without controversy at the party's convention last week, sharply criticized Democratic policies that have shaped state government for three decades.

The preamble read in part: "Their party's policies brought us the hideous violence of David Peterson."

Peterson is the mental patient who wandered away from a state mental hospital and stabbed Jessica Short to death at a Middletown street fair in July 1989.

"The Republicans have to remove it from their platform," Randell Short said in the television interview. "We should have a clean race in the state of Connecticut and issues be addressed directly, not pinpointing events."

Another unnamed family member was quoted as saying, "It was an irresponsible act for the Republicans to put that in their platform ... You can't blame the Democrats for this."

Meanwhile, Catherine Short, Jessica's mother, told The Associated Press Wednesday she and her husband did not want to comment on the matter. She also said the relatives who were commenting were speaking for themselves and not for her and her husband.

Asked about the statement Randell Short made, she said, "We don't endorse it."

The flap over the GOP platform started Monday, when U.S. Rep. Bruce Morrison, a Democratic candidate for governor, criticized it at a state Capitol news conference. He called on Republican gubernatorial candidate John G. Rowland of Waterbury to disassociate himself from the platform.

Rowland refused, and Foley stood behind the reference to the girl's murder.

Meanwhile, independent gubernatorial candidate Lowell P. Weicker Jr. Wednesday joined Morrison in criticizing the platform.

"When I saw that part of the Republican platform ... all I could say was, 'shame,'" Weicker told about 250 supporters at a rally outside the state Capitol prior to filing nominating petitions.

Pressed on whether he thought the GOP erred by politicizing the death, Foley said, "I don't think it was an error. The only question that comes to my mind was any discomfort it has caused the family."

Contino pleads guilty

NEW LONDON (AP) — Peter J. Contino, who authorities said was a partner in a $3 million-per-month drug ring, pleaded guilty to six drug charges just as his Superior Court trial was to begin.

Contino faces a sentence of life in prison, suspended after 20 years, and five years' probation.

Contino, 35, of Preston, was released late Tuesday from a prison in Suffolk County, New York, where he served eight months of a one-year sentence for a 1987 offense of illegal possession of a firearm.

Connecticut State Police took custody of Contino and brought him to New London Superior Court Wednesday, where his trial on the drug charges was to begin.

Superior Court Judge Seymour L. Hendel ordered Contino held on the same $150,000 bond until his Aug. 28 sentencing.

Attorney M. Donald Cardwell said he advised his client to plead guilty to the charges "to get this part of his life behind him."

He said Contino was drug-dependent and that pleading guilty is part of the rehabilitative process.

Contino pleaded to the six charges under the Alford Doctrine, which allows a plea where the defendant does not necessarily admit to the crime, but is admits that if the case went to trial, there would likely be a guilty verdict.

Contino said the 12 ounces of 50 percent pure cocaine police seized from his home was partly for his use and for sale to support his personal use.

Dog in distress rescued

NORTH BRANFORD (AP) — Firefighters have been known to rescue cats stranded in trees, but saving a dog in distress may have been a first.

The frightened dog had been stuck atop a more than 65-foot-high ledge at the Tilcon Connecticut stone quarry for at least two days before the East Haven Fire Department came to his rescue Wednesday.

"We did a nice thing today. It was rewarding. There was no other way that dog could have gotten down," said Michael Cetalla, a battalion chief from the East Haven Fire Department, whose 110-foot aerial ladder was used to reach the animal.

Workers at the quarry discovered the stranded dog Tuesday, a day after they heard its barks, said Ed Platt, plant superintendent.

The dog was stranded more than 65 feet up on a section of ledge Platt estimated was 6 feet at its widest and about 20 feet in length in an unused section of the quarry.

The animal had become trapped after a section of stone connecting the area to the rest of the half-mile stretch of ledge had given way, leaving a gap, Platt said.

"We were very concerned about his safety," Platt said.

The rescue brought sighs of relief to quarry workers who had used a construction crane to bring the stray a bucket of water and a filet mignon sandwich but who could not get the canine down from its precarious perch.

Workers were just able to reach the top of the ledge, but could not get on it, with a 30-ton hydraulic crane they brought to the quarry Tuesday morning to try to save the animal.

"We were hoping to coax him into the arms of the man in the bucket. But he showed his teeth and backed away. We were afraid then we might scare him and he'd go over the side," Platt said.

Before retreating, the Tilcon workers slid a 5-gallon bucket of water over to the dog, who, appropriately enough, was given the nickname "Rocky."

On Wednesday morning, before the fire truck showed up, Platt went back up the crane to give the dog a filet mignon sandwich, complete with lettuce, tomato and mayonnaise.

"One of the fellows had brought it in from his dinner," said Platt.

Federal agency holds up decision on gas pipeline

By JOHN DIAMOND
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A federal agency has delayed action on a major natural gas pipeline for New England and the project's backer said the move would likely upset a tight construction timetable.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, in a 3-1 vote Wednesday, said it needs more information before deciding on the 364.4-mile Iroquois Gas Pipeline, a project designed to link New England to Canadian gas fields.

The commission, which has been considering the proposed pipeline for four years, said it needs more information on whether the gas is needed in the Northeast and on whether it would be supplied at competitive rates.

"I perceive as part of my job to move projects along — put pipe in the ground," said FERC Chairman Martin Allday. But he said that "policy dictated that we have this (additional) hearing. I think that what we're doing is moving the process along."

Under FERC's decision, an administrative law judge would conduct a hearing on the outstanding issues within 45 days of when the commission formally issues its report on the project, which is expected within a few days. After the hearing, proponents and opponents would file written responses and then the commission would make a final decision by the end of November.

The president of Iroquois Gas Transmission System, Robert J. Reid, said the delay would likely delay the pipeline's projected construction schedule. Work was set to begin this fall and be completed in October 1991, in time for that winter's heating season.

"It was important that we receive FERC approval in July in order to maintain our timetable for construction of the pipeline," Reid said, adding that he believed FERC was aware of the need to move quickly.

A complicating factor for Iroquois is the expiration in October 1991 of export agreements needed to move the gas from Canada across the St. Lawrence River and into New York. Because of the delay, the pipeline will not be completed by then, said Iroquois spokesman Gary Davis, and those agreements will have to be renegotiated. But Davis said that because the pipeline will be nearly completed by then, renewing the agreements should be a formality.

"It may effectively kill the project," said Anne Marie Muesser, leader of a citizens' group called Gasp, which opposes the pipeline. "It's clear that there are issues that have to be looked at."

Utilities and elected officials, including governors Mario Cuomo of New York and Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, support the pipeline as a low-cost energy boon to a region dependent on costly imported oil. Increasing questions about whether the Northeast can meet its current electrical generating needs have intensified the push for the pipeline because some of the gas would be used for electricity generation.

The plan by the Iroquois Gas Transmission System, a consortium of 13 utilities in Canada and the United States, would supply the natural gas equivalent of 30 million barrels of oil per year to Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York and New Jersey — enough gas to meet the annual energy needs of 1.5 million homes.

The pipeline would run from the St. Lawrence River through wooded areas, along highways and rail lines, under rivers and through back yards in upstate New York, western Connecticut and under Long Island Sound to Long Island.

Rep. John Rowland, R-Conn., an opponent of the pipeline, said FERC's decision, "tells me that FERC is not convinced the plan makes economic sense or that the market will exist for the natural gas they want to bring to the Northeast."

Plans for casino go forward

COLCHESTER (AP) — The Golden Hill Paugussetts began clearing land for a proposed gambling casino that the tribe's war chief says will be open for business by next month despite threatened arrests from the state.

At a press conference Wednesday, Kenneth Piper, the 29-year-old Indian leader, said he is confident that state police will not carry out their threat to arrest him if gambling begins on the reservation.

But Chief State's Attorney John J. Kelly said that if the Indians begin a gambling operation, they will be violating state gaming statutes and will be arrested.

"There is no change in our attitude," Kelly said. "Criminal statutes are enforced in this state."

Meriden developer Dominick Sanzo has contracted to invest about $5 million in the reservation to build and manage the casino, in return for an unspecified percentage of the profits.

Piper, who is known as Moonfacebear, said the opening of a temporary casino, scheduled for Saturday, has been postponed two weeks because of problems getting equipment and the threat of police action.

Piper said he hoped the question of Indian rights would be settled in civil court.

Piper said the tribe disputes state jurisdiction on the reservation because Native American tribes are sovereign nations and only the federal government can make treaties and agreements with them.

The state is appealing a decision by a federal court that said the state had to negotiate with the Mashantucket Pequots of Ledyard about expanding their high-stakes bingo operation to include the same kind of gambling the Paugussetts want. A recent decision ordered the state to begin negotiations with the tribe while the appeal is pending.

Piper charged that the reason behind the state's opposition to reservation gambling was a combination of racism and the state's inability to collect any taxes on gambling profits.

"The reason they are against us is that you're talking Indians and you're talking non-taxable revenue," he said.

Piper has said the gambling operation would pay for housing and a community center on the reservation.

Adopt a pet: Polly and Corky

By BARBARA RICHMOND
Manchester Herald

We probably should call her Wiggles, the little female terrier cross at the Manchester Dog Pound. But, she's been given a more dignified name of Polly.

Polly is this week's featured pet at the pound, where she was abandoned last week. She's about 3 months old, is very active and has a voracious appetite.

As of Tuesday, there were no new dogs at the pound. However, four other dogs that have been at the pound for a couple of weeks, or more, are still waiting to be adopted.

Three of the four are black Labrador retriever crosses and all have been pictured in the column recently and are known as Liberty, Gabby and Smokey. They need good homes very soon.

The fourth is a brown Labrador retriever-setter cross. He was found on Spring Street on July 17 and also needs someone to adopt him.

Dog Warden Thomas Pascantell is at the pound weekdays from noon to 1 p.m. The pound is located on town property off Olcott Street near the landfill.

There also is someone at the pound from 6 to 9 p.m., Monday through Friday. The phone number at the pound is 643-6642. If there is no answer call the police department at 646-4555.

Aid to Helpless Animals Inc. is a volunteer organization that takes in stray and homeless cats. Volunteers board most of the animals in their homes and sometimes the numbers become overwhelming.

POLLY

CORKY

This week's featured pet is a cute male cat called Corky. All of the cats and kittens put up for adoption are neutered or spayed, given their shots, and are tested for feline leukemia, unless too young when adopted.

To adopt a cat or kiten or for more information call either 242-2156, day or evening, or 232-8317, evenings only.

Musician dies

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Morty Nevins, the accordion-playing member of The Three Suns group of the 1940s and '50s, died Friday of cancer at age 73.

The Three Suns sold several million records over a 20-year span, including "Peg o' My Heart" and the trio's signature tune, "Twilight Time."

Nevins' brother, Al, played guitar while his cousin, Artie Dunn, sang and played the organ. Al Nevins died in 1965, Dunn in 1989.

The Three Suns performed for radio, played club and hotel dates across the nation and were regulars on Kate Smith's television show in the early 1950s.

Nevins continued to compose music, producing such hit tunes as "These Things I Offer You for a Lifetime," "Lovers' Gold," "You Are My Destiny" and "Midnight for Two."

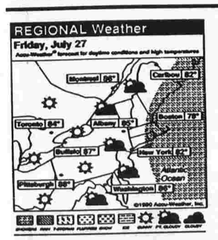
Radio pioneer dies

MUNCIE, Ind. (AP) — Donald A. Burton, an Indiana radio pioneer who started his own station in 1926 in his parents' parlor, died Tuesday at age 84.

Burton, who was inducted into the Indiana Journalism Hall of Fame in 1986, was 20 when he founded WLBC-AM at his parents' Muncie home.

He became chairman of the board of Tri-City Communications, which owned WLBC and its sister FM station until DRMS Communications bought them in 1986. Burton added a television station to his holdings in 1953 and sold it to the Ball State University Foundation in 1971, when it became public television station WIPB.

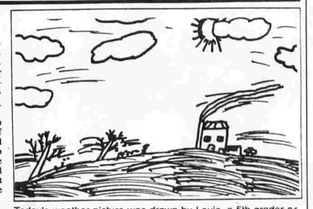
Weather



Partly sunny

The weather tonight in the greater Manchester area: mostly clear. Low near 65. Calm wind. Friday, partly sunny with a 30 percent chance of showers late in the day. High near 85. Outlook for Saturday, mostly cloudy with a chance of showers. High 80 to 85.

The early morning weather map showed a front just off the coast of New England through Cape Cod then down the Atlantic coast to Florida. High pressure was over the Great Lakes region. The front will drift east a bit today but may start moving west into New England late Friday.



Today's weather picture was drawn by Louis, a 5th-grader or Channing Drive in Manchester. He did not include his last name or his school.

Thoughts

No one can walk through life without some scars to prove it. We all have been wounded. Sometimes we've wounded ourselves, victims of our own weaknesses. We should not hesitate to show our wounds to God. God is eager to see where we hurt, where we need help. We should not be afraid to show God those areas in our lives that still need work. Jesus once said "People who are in good health do not need a doctor; sick people do ... I have come to call, not the self-righteous, but sinners." (Mark 2:9-12-13) A doctor certainly wants to know where we hurt. Can God, the greatest healer of all, be any less caring? There's no need for us to hide our wounds from God. We have every reason to ask God to touch our broken lives with his healing touch.

Bluegrass, jazz at Band Shell

By BARBARA ARMENTANO
Publicity Director
Manchester Band Shell

MANCHESTER — Kentucky bluegrass music will prevail Saturday at the Manchester Band Shell when the local band, "Traver Hollow," takes over the stage.

The five-member group was born 10 years ago. The group has traveled cross-country and abroad and released several albums. Members live in Coventry and Columbia.

BONNIE G. AND DON DONEGAN

The performance is sponsored by Empire Tool and Manufacturing Co., Inc. Rain date is August 2.

Concerts at the Band Shell are free and begin at 7 p.m. The stage is located on the campus of Manchester Community College, 60 Bidwell St., where there is plenty of free parking. Bring chairs or blankets, but please leave pets at home.

On Sunday, the entertainment at the Band Shell continues with Sousa marches and patriotic songs by Orchestra New England.

Theme of the concert is "Let Freedom Ring," in honor of developments in Eastern Europe. Polish, Hungarian and Czeckoslovakian classics will be highlighted.

Sponsors are Southern New England Telephone and the Connecticut Commission on the Arts. In case of rain, the concert will be held at East Catholic High School, 115 New State Road.

Most of us probably are not natives of Dixieland, but still enjoy the rhythm and melodies of this traditional music. On Monday, the Galvanized Jazz Band, masters of ragtime and blues music, will offer New Orleans-style Dixieland jazz.

Sponsors are Connecticut National Bank and Ward Manufacturing Co. Rain date is Tuesday.

People of all ages can enjoy country, oldies, folk and sing-a-long music offered by musician, singer and comedian Don Donegan, who will visit the Band Shell on Wednesday.

He keeps a fast-moving, lively pace as he plays a 12-string guitar, harmonica and bass pedals simultaneously.

Sponsor is the Manchester Bicentennial Band Shell Corp.

The Band Shell committee already is booking programs for the 1991 season. Sponsors and donations continue to make the programs and performances possible. For more Band Shell information, call Ralph Maccarone at 649-2020.

Fashion show at Hale homestead

COVENTRY — An historic-look fashion show will be held Saturday in honor of Nathan Hale Ancient Fifes & Drums' 25th anniversary.

The show will be at 10:30 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday at the Nathan Hale Homestead, South Street. Admission is free and refreshments are available.

Local artists display work

COVENTRY — Art works by four local artists are featured in the Coventry Arts Commission's Art Gallery at Booth & Dimock Library on Route 31. Their art will be on display at the library until Aug. 25

Featured artists are:

•Ruth Francis, an 14-year artist who began her art career with pencil drawings while growing up in France. She now expresses herself through acrylics and collages.

•Kristina Plamer, a student at the University of Connecticut's School of Fine Arts who was awarded the Marion and the Marjorie Case Scholarship for a ceramic piece, entitled "Curiosity," in the 1990 Scholarship Show for Art. Her prints in the Gallery include a poster conveying complexity and cycles of life.

•Jim McMullan, a self-taught wood sculptor who has practiced for 20 years and is currently a member of the American Association of Woodturners. McMullan uses native Connecticut wood mainly from Coventry.

•And Beverly Kramer, who studied art in Philadelphia, where she was born. She has exhibited her paintings with the Willimantic Paint and Palette Club in the outdoor show of 1989 and in the spring '90 show at the Eastbrook Mall. She also participated this year in the Manchester Garden of Arts Show.

Anyone interested in showing their work in future exhibits should send samples in the form of slides to the Coventry Town Hall, care of Peter Crowley. The Arts Commission would like to encourage all – the dabbler, the professional, the amateur to participate.

Restaurants promote dining

The Hartford Restaurant Association has taken an innovative approach to promoting summer dinner business through a game called "Meal of Fortune."

Each time a customer dines in a member restaurant during the summer, a game card is presented with the guest check. The card allows the customer to enter a drawing to become one of twelve contestants in the Meal of Fortune game to be held in Hartford Civic Center Mall on Sept. 6.

Prizes include roundtrip air transportation for two to Paris; eight china place settings; a night on the town in New York including a limo, dinner and Broadway show; a catered home cocktail party for 30; a wheelbarrow full of Iced Shrimp provided by Better Brands, Inc.; two season tickets to Theaterworks with dinner at a Hartford restaurant before each performance; and one dozen long-stemmed roses.

For more information call 525-8200.

Art show at mountain base

WILMINGTON, Vt. — More than 200 artists, craftspeople and sculptors will be represented at the 27th annual Art on the Mountain fine art and crafts exhibit and sale.

The exhibit, featuring paintings, basketry, dolls, fiber art, blown glass, wrought iron, jewelry, pottery, sculpture, woodwork, and other art mediums, will be from Saturday until Aug. 12 at the base lodge of Haystack Mountain Ski & Golf Resort. Hours of operation are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. A $1 donation is requested for admission.

Actor-turned-chef heads new eatery

By DIANNA M. TALBOT
Manchester Herald

MANCHESTER — David Kolumber has a passion for food and for the performing arts. So he decided to make a career out of both.

In March, Kolumber opened Heavenly Hog Restaurant at 520 E. Center St., which specializes in smoked and barbecue-style meat dishes. He is in the process of developing the restaurant into what he hopes someday will become a franchise.

In addition, the Manchester High School Class of 1973 graduate satisfies a need to artistically express himself by performing as a singer at local weddings and as a fill-in for a dinner theater in the Boston area.

The combination of careers is fulfilling, said Kolumber, who worked as a singer in New York City nightclubs for several years before deciding to open the restaurant in his hometown.

At one time, however, he did attempt to make a solo career out of the performing arts.

"New York was such a rat race I decided not to pursue it," Kolumber said.

Addressing a penchant for good food, Kolumber left New York, and in 1984 opened up a gourmet food shop in Glastonbury called Cravings. But he was forced to close the shop after only a few months because of an accident in which he fell and broke his back.

After a year of recovery, Kolumber's desire to perform drove him back to New York City, where he continued his performances.

Judy Harding/Manchester Herald

CAREER COMBO — David Kolumber, owner of The Heavenly Hog, sits in front of a plate of barbecued ribs and french fries at his 520 Center St. restaurant. He says he has found self-fulfillment in both operating a restaurant and moonlighting as a performer.

He later decided to leave the city again to pursue another career in the culinary arts. He decided to open up the Heavenly Hog, after learning that a Chinese food restaurant at the Center Street location had closed.

"I had been looking for something like this in the area for a couple of years," Kolumber said. "I just decided I was going to do it."

Before opening the restaurant, Kolumber decided that he would offer people who like to eat out a different type of menu at his restaurant.

"I've always loved smoked meats," he said. "I've had my own smoker at home for years."

The Heavenly Hog smokes meat naturally, using woods such as hickory or applewood, and does not use nitrate-based preservatives, said Kolumber.

Business has been good so far, he said. "I'm very pleased."

Heavenly Hog's lunch and dinner menus offer moderately-priced entrees, including barbecue pork, ribs and chicken, smoked turkey breast and grilled fish. Prices range from $2.95 to $13.95. Appetizers, such as soup or salad, range from $1.95 to $5.95.

The restaurant is open for lunch Monday through Friday, 11:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.; Saturday, 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.; and for dinner, Monday through Thursday, 5 to 9 p.m.; and Friday and Saturday, 5 to 10 p.m. It is closed on Sunday.

Loss of eyesight doesn't stop painter

By KAREN SCHWARTZ
The Associated Press

SCITUATE, R.I. — Vicente Paratore's canvas is filled with bobbing sailboats on soft blue water. The light streams from golden clouds to pale sand, moving the viewer's eye through the seascape. Paratore creates the painting, but he cannot see it. He is blind.

Paratore paints from memory and experience. In the 56-years he had sight, he stored up the images he now recreates. A half-century as an artist gave him the know-how to mix oils by feel.

"When people say it's impossible, I say 'nothing is impossible,'" he says.

A stroke three years ago caused the nerve damage that left Paratore legally blind. Today, he sees only dim contrast, light against dark.

At that, "It's all foggy," he says.

Paratore picks up a finished canvas, unaware he is holding it upside down.

"I am handicapped in a way but I don't really think of myself as handicapped because I can do anything I put my mind to," he says.

When Paratore lost his eyesight in 1988 he was left without his livelihood and without his will to live. He had supported himself for decades with the painted clown faces he sculpted from burlap and sold in places like Boston's Quincy Market.

After a few depressed months, Paratore set out "to become again what I was."

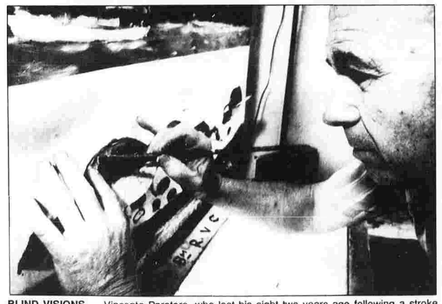
He enrolled in a school for the blind, where he was taught skills from cooking to walking with a cane. The school was stimulating for Paratore, who has only a seventh-grade education.

But, "In my mind I say I have to paint. That's the big challenge," Paratore said in English still broken after 30 years in this country.

So the Argentinean native devised an ingenious stenciling method that allows him to paint his seascapes and landscapes.

Using a thick, black, marker on white paper, Paratore draws the objects of his painting. Then, following a line he can barely see, he cuts around the clouds, boats, rocks, trees, shrubs or lighthouse he has drawn. He pins the paper pattern onto the canvas and uses it as a guide to paint his picture.

"The method he has developed, I think is phenomenal," says Deborah Brayton, executive director of Very Special Arts Rhode Island, which offers assistance to the disabled. "It is so clear from the canvas what he is after. He sees it in his mind's eye and is able to get it down."



BLIND VISIONS — Vincente Paratore, who lost his sight two years ago following a stroke that damaged optical nerves, mixes oil paints under a painting in progress at his home in Scluate, R.I. The artist paints from memory.

High expectations for new releases

By JOHN HORN
The Associated Press

HOLLYWOOD — Forget Bruce Willis, Arnold Schwarzenegger and Tom Cruise. The new stars of the summer are a spooky spider and a bubbly bear.

The mega-budget, male-oriented films "Die Hard 2," "Total Recall" and "Days of Thunder" have yet to excite moviegoers the way last summer's "Batman" did.

But the Walt Disney Co. hopes its "Arachnophobia" and "Jungle Book" can find loyal patrons in the crowded summer film season.

There's no way "Arachnophobia" will match "Batman," which made $252 million in 1989. The eight-legged drama does have the potential, though, to emerge as one of the season's sleeper successes.

In a campaign littered with hardware-laden projects aimed at young males, "Arachnophobia" and Paramount's "Ghost," two modest, original works, appear to have a good chance of reaching a broader audience.

There are signs that a share of the audience is more interested in novel, non-sequel titles than the more heavily promoted and expensive cookie-cutter films.

"Junele Book." the 1967 film released last Friday by Disney, enjoyed the best opening ever for an animated movie with $7.7 million last weekend, surpassing the $7.5 million collected by "The Land Before Time" in its debut weekend in 1988.

Last week, "Arachnophobia," starring Jeff Daniels and John Goodman, opened to moderate but unspectacular business of about $1.2 million on more than 1,200 screens. "Who Framed Roger Rabbit," by comparison, grossed $1.8 million in its first night on 999 screens two summers ago.

On Tuesday, Walt Disney Co. President Frank Wells predicted the thriller, the first release from Disney subsidiary Hollywood Pictures, would be one of the season's biggest hits.

The head of marketing for a competing studio, speaking on condition that he not be identified, said "Arachnophobia" should open slowly and build forcefully on strong word of mouth. (It's pronounced ah-rak'-nah-foh'-bee-yah.)

CinemaScore, which tracks audience reactions to movies, said the film scored a B+ in surveys of 335 patrons Wednesday. That places it alongside "Dick Tracy," but below "Ghost," "Days of Thunder" and "Die Hard 2," all of which

TOWN OF MANCHESTER, CONNECTICUT NOTICE OF ADOPTION OF ORDINANCE

In accordance with the provisions of Chapter 3, Sections 1 and 9 of the Town Charter, notice is hereby given of the adoption by the Board of Directors of the Town of Manchester, Connecticut on July 18, 1990.

SANITARY LANDFILL AND RECYCLING ORDINANCE

Section — Legislative Finding

It is hereby found that there exists the need to regulate the usage of the Town of Manchester Sanitary Landfill in order that existing Landfill space can be utilized to its maximum capacity and efficiency.

To assist in reducing the volume of Municipal Solid Waste, it is found that the Recycling of designated defined materials by residents and business/commercial/industrial users is both necessary and appropriate.

Section — Purpose

It is hereby declared that the purpose of this chapter is to protect and preserve space within the Town of Manchester Sanitary Landfill, to promote the use of recycling by residents and business/commercial/industrial users, to minimize and if possible, eliminate environmental hazards at the Sanitary Landfill and to regulate the Town of Manchester Sanitary Landfill for the purpose of maintaining adequate space for the disposal of Municipal Solid Waste generated in or originating within or otherwise entering into the limits of the Town.

Section — Scope

The provisions of this chapter shall apply to all residential and business/commercial/industrial users of the Manchester Sanitary Landfill, including residents receiving curbside pickup from the Town of Manchester, and for business/commercial/industrial establishments receiving private collection.

Section — Regulations

The Director of Public Works shall make necessary and proper regulations to accomplish purposes set forth herein, which regulations shall not become effective until after adoption by the Board of Directors.

This Ordinance shall take effect ten (10) days after this publication in this newspaper provided that within ten (10) days after this publication of this Ordinance a petition signed by not less than five (5) percent of the electors of the Town, as determined from the latest lists of the Registrars of Voters, has not been filed with the Town Clerk requesting its reference to a special Town election.

Astrograph

Your Birthday

July 27, 1990

In the year ahead you might be a trifle too restless for your own good and tempted to make changes merely for change's sake. Your best bet could be to stay where you are, because your potential for success is better there.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Strive to be productive today and not a procrastinator. Things you put off now hoping to get around to later might never get done. Keep pace with your responsibilities. Get a jump on life by understanding the influences which are governing you in the year ahead. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today by mailing $1.25 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Impulses for instant gratification could cause financial complications at this time. Stop telling yourself there are things you urgently need you might never use later.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Don't anticipate failure today before you even exert the proper effort. You have equally as much chance of winning as you do of losing. Focus on the former, not the latter.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) In order to achieve your aims today, you might be inclined to resort to subterfuge. If you do and it's discovered, it could prove extremely embarrassing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Today if you have a lot of rushing around to do, there is a possibility you might be careless with your possessions. Don't leave your keys in the coffee shop or purchases you made in an open car.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) If you are not prepared to help yourself today, don't expect associates to pick up the slack. Success might be denied you through no one's fault but your own.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Fight tendencies today towards self-pity. It's a futile role, because companions will be immersed in their own problems and they'll have little sympathy for you.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Instead of feeling obligated to do business with a person with whom you dealt previously, go where you can get the best bargain. Sentiment could be a bit too expensive today.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Indecision or inconsistency on your part will be unnerving to people with whom you're involved today. In order to maintain your creditability, do that you say you will do.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) If the boss gives you a special assignment today, do not treat it indifferently just because it's something you resent doing. If you don't produce, you will have some explaining to do later.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) There's a possibility you might be a trifle gullible today in your commercial dealings. Be extra careful and questioning if you have to conduct business with persons you don't know too well.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Try not to become too deeply involved too quickly with someone you recently met. This person could be OK, but to be on the safe side, give this person time to prove creditability.

Jumping into the fray

By James Jacoby

A little understood precept of bidding is that after you have limited your hand by passing originally, you can later bid like crazy. To some extent this is true, but it is very important to be certain that your values make sense.

Note today's disaster, incurred by a good foreign pair playing in their country's team competition. North came in with a takeout double, dangerous in itself with limited values when there was no guarantee that partner held length in either major suit. When East jumped to three diamonds, South pictured North's hand as having more length and strength in the majors than it did, and so jumped to four spades. Sure. North might have held K-J-x-x-x of spades and A-Q-x-x-x of hearts, but as a rule, in hit-or-miss competitive bidding, partner does not hold the dream cards to justify your overbid. South should have contented himself with a three-spade bid, which West would not have been able to double.

Against four spades doubled, when the jack of clubs was led, declarer won the ace and played a diamond to dummy's king. East took the ace and played king of spades and a spade. Declarer now had only six winning tricks, but toward the end the defenders had gone up a trump-count trick to let South off for minus 800.

The onus for the bad result must rest with North. When he came in with his passed-hand double, he could not be sure that East did not have a rebid in one or both of the majors, and he should have discreetly waited for more information from further bidding of the opponents.

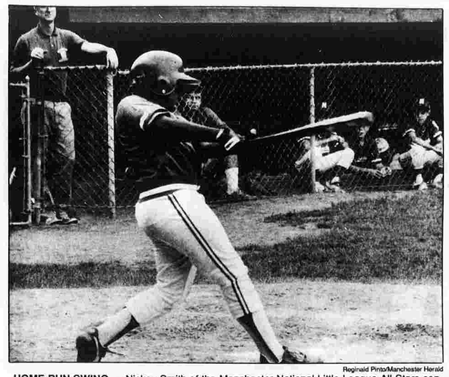
Enfield eliminates Manchester Nationals



Reginald Pinto/Manchester Herald

By JIM TIERNEY
Manchester Herald

ENFIELD — The fine run the Manchester National League All-Stars made in the District Eight Double Elimination Tournament, unfortunately, came to an end Wednesday night at Powder Hollow Park.

Falling behind, 11-0, after three innings, Manchester Nationals bowed to Enfield, 12-5, in the loser's bracket final and also bowed out of the tournament after compiling a 3-2 mark.

Enfield, which lost its opener to Windsor Locks in nine innings and has since run off five straight victories, will play at Windsor Friday night at 6.

Winning pitcher Keith Archambault went the distance for Enfield and allowed four four Manchester hits in notching the victory. He struck out four and walked five.

Back-to-back five-run outbursts by Enfield in the second and third innings keyed the victory.

"Archambault has pitched extremely well for us the whole series," Enfield coach Rich Ferry said. "The big thing has been his control. For the most part, he's around the plate. He doesn't hurt himself with walks."

Archambault set down eight of the first nine batters he faced.

Meanwhile, Manchester starting pitcher John Helin encountered difficulty from the start and was constantly behind the Enfield hitters.

Helin and Todd Napolitano, who relieved Helin in the third, combined for 11 walks. In 2 2/3 innings pitched, Helin walked six, struck out four and threw a staggering 78 pitches.

"You can't give a pitcher like that the lead he had," Manchester Nationals manager Corky Coughlin said. "You're not going to win a game when you get to the final four here with 11 walks. They weren't as sharp as they've been the previous part of the tournament."

Enfield took a 1-0 lead in the bottom of the first after leadoff hitter Nick Hosig singled and scored on three wild pitches. Enfield sent nine batters to the plate in the second and scored five runs with two outs.

No. 9 hitter Andy Bishop hit a two-run home run which barely cleared the centerfield fence. Three walks and two RBI singles by Eric White and Archambault plated the other three runs for a 6-0 Enfield lead.

"We have a balanced hitting attack," Ferry added. "I don't think a whole lot was expected of this team."

In the Enfield third when 10 batters went to the plate, a two-out grandslam by John Niro, which bounced off the top of the centerfield fence before falling over, extended the lead to 11-0.

"We've played sharp defense the whole way and tonight we just seemed a half step away," Manchester assistant coach Bob Boland said.

Manchester got on the board in the fourth when Nickey Smith led off with a home run to left field. Two Enfield errors and three walks led to three Manchester runs in the fifth, cutting the gap to 11-4. Darren White singled home Kevin Coughlin in the sixth for Manchester's final run.

Napolitano and Josh Solomonson also hit safely for Manchester. Archambault and Bishop had two hits each in defeat.

"The last two innings they were battling," Coughlin said. "They've had a great tournament. It's the best committed team Manchester's ever had as far as practice and work habits."

Silent Clemens silences Brewers

By RICK GANO
The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — First, Roger Clemens shut out the Milwaukee Brewers. Then the Boston Red Sox right-hander just plain shut up.

Clemens kept reporters waiting close to an hour after his first victory in nearly a month and then wouldn't talk about Wednesday's game or his performance.

Joe Morgan, the Red Sox manager, had plenty to say about the way Clemens pitched.

"You saw a guy with determination," said Morgan. "He threw some fierce fastballs today. I expect this every time out. That's how good I think he is.

"I thought he might have to pitch a shutout. He almost did."

Clemens (13-5) gave up two singles to Gary Sheffield and another to Edgar Diaz and one walk. He struck out nine as the Red Sox broke a four-game losing streak. Clemens now has five career shutouts in County Stadium.

"He had all three of his pitches working. We just couldn't get anybody home," said Sheffield.

"I tip my hat to the guy," loser Chris Bosio said of Clemens. "It was one of those games where he overpowered us from the first inning to the ninth."

Bosio (4-8) hasn't overpowered many with just one win in his last 14 starts. He gave up five walks to the slumping Red Sox and a two-run homer to Carlos Quintana that hit the right field foul pole.

"Take away the ball that sliced into the the pole and we might still be playing (0-0. We had no control over Quintana's ball," said Brewers manager Tom Trebelhorn.

Who said his team had been beset by bad luck during a 5-15 stretch, said Quintana's homer was a long time coming.

"We hit the right field pole and I laughed with fiendish glee," said Morgan. "It's about time it was one of ours that hit it. We're about eight in the hole now."

Milwaukee's biggest threat came in the sixth when Diaz singled and went to second on an infield out. Robin Yount walked with two outs, but Clemens got Sheffield on a grounder to third.

Clemens had two losses and two no decisions in his four previous starts and hadn't won since June 28. Suggestions that he might have a tired arm were dashed by Wednesday's 110-pitch performance, 78 for strikes.

"He was throwing good. He had an excellent fastball and forkball," Morgan said. "But it was one of those games we did not have in sight at any time, especially when we left opportunities on base.

"But that's what a great pitcher is all about to win a game like this."

NOT HIS NIGHT — Nolan Ryan of the Rangers shows his frustration during play against the New York Yankees Wednesday night in Arlington, Texas. Ryan failed in his bid for win No. 300, but the Rangers won in 11 innings, 9-7.

Ryan's 300th win will have to wait

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
The Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Nolan Ryan picked the wrong time to have his worst performance in 13 years against the New York Yankees.

A good luck haircut didn't even work as his 300th victory party was spoiled by three homers.

However, Pete Incaviglia kept Ryan from a loss Wednesday night with a dramatic ninth-inning homer and Rafael Palmeiro called the game-winning homer in the Texas Rangers' 9-7 victory in 11 innings.

Ryan was crestfallen because he didn't win before the sellout crowd of 41,954, largest of the year in Arlington Stadium.

"I'm really disappointed it turned out like it did," Ryan said. "A lot of people went to a lot of trouble to be in the ballpark kind of let them down."

Ryan, hoping to become the 20th pitcher to earn 300 career victories, trailed 7-3 when he left after the eighth inning.

The Rangers tied it on Incaviglia's two-out, two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth inning off Dave Righetti then won it on Palmeiro's two-run homer in the 11th off rookie Mark Leiter.

Palmeiro called his shot for Commissioner Fay Vincent.

Texas owner George Bush told Palmeiro "it's getting late and the commissioner wants to go home."

Palmeiro told Vincent "the game's over."

Then he hit the game-winner.

"It was good to get Nolan off the hook because he has been carrying us for so long it's nice to save him for a change," Incaviglia said.

Kenny Rogers picked up his fourth victory against five losses with three innings of one-hit relief.

Ryan said he felt good enough to start on Monday against Milwaukee although manager Bobby Valentine will make that decision today.

"I'll see how he feels and then we'll make a decision." Valentine said.

Ryan said he's ready to get his 300th ordeal over.

"I don't want this thing to drag out," Ryan said. "I don't want a cloud on it. The last thing I want is for it to drag out."

Kevin Maas, Roberto Kelly and Bob Geren hit homers off Ryan.

"He didn't have his best stuff," Kelly said. "It wasn't the Nolan Ryan I had faced before."

Maas was one of four Yankee rookies in the game.

"Just to bat against a Hall of Famer is an honor and to hit a home run off him is the greatest feeling I've had in my life," Maas said.

Don Mattingly didn't play because of a bad back and could be headed for the disabled list.

Changes coming in college sports

Change is in the wind for big-time college sports: More emphasis on academics, less on athletics. It is a new look that carries the endorsement of the pros, as reported in this last of a three-part AP Sports Extra series.

By HAL BOCK
The Associated Press

August could be a landmark month in American collegiate sports.

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue has promulged new guidelines by Aug. 1 to reduce the pressure on prospects who feel obliged to leave school early to prep for the pros in pre-draft scouting combines and preseason minicamps.

Two weeks after that, the Collegiate Commissioners Conference and the NCAA Council will submit legislation for the January 1991 convention, and one of the proposals, which carries the enthusiastic endorsement of the NCAA Presidents Commission, will drastically cut back the time student-athletes can devote to sports.

Clearly, change is in the wind.

Tagliabue is sensitive to criticism from collegiate administrators who blame the NFL for declining graduation rates among football players. An Associated Press survey showed that almost two of every three players drafted last April did not finish their studies and that 82 left one semester or less short of their degrees, specifically to get a head start on the pros.

"Before this year's football season begins, we will implement certain limitations and restrictions on the activities of NFL teams ... in order to eliminate excesses and to assure that there is no unwarranted interference in the academic programs of student athletes," Tagliabue said the Knight Commission on college athletic reform last month.

The commissioner is unwilling, however, to allow the NFL to shoulder the entire burden for academic shortcomings.

"I think it is erroneous to suggest, and there is no basis for saying, that NFL recruiting and hiring policies or practices have had a substantial negative impact on college programs, including on the academic progress of college football players," he said

That opinion is not shared, however, by a large segment of the collegiate community. The College Football Association adopted strong anti-NFL resolutions last month, citing the demands that cut into class time for student-athletes and lead many players to leave school short of their degrees.

The CFA said it wanted minicamps postponed until after the academic year and a commitment from the pros to pay for the completion of a player's education if he comes into the league without his degree. Until the NFL becomes more sensitive to such issues, the CFA said its members will not cooperate with the pro scouts.

"Significant courtesies have been extended to pro scouts," said Chuck Neinas, executive director of the CFA. "Those courtesies will no longer be extended unless something is done. The moratorium is in effect now.

"We're just asking that pro football pay attention to its farm system. The pros aren't giving the colleges the time of day. Let's face facts, pro football is interested only in pro football."

The strong words from the CFA can be traced directly to the offices of university and college presidents, who are putting the pressure on their athletic departments to improve graduation rates.

Tagliabue thinks the institutions would be better served cleaning up their own houses before complaining about the NFL.

"Based upon all the available information," the commissioner said, "it is evident to me that the graduation rates of college football players are overwhelmingly determined by the policies and practices of the colleges and universities themselves — and only marginally influenced by the policies and practices of the NFL.

"I say this not because the NFL needs or is seeking exoneration or because I desire to be self-serving. Rather, I say it because it is obvious that high pressure, commercialized, mass-marketed college athletic programs, involving long seasons and extraordinary athletic and other pressures that necessarily limit academic opportunities, make it inevitable that graduation rates for college athletes will be a matter of concern."

That, too, is changing.

Last month, the NCAA Presidents Commission endorsed a package of legislation presented by Collegiate Commissioners Association that, if adopted by the national convention next January, will have significant impact on the time student-athletes devote to sports.

NFL to announce expansion

NEW YORK (AP) — The NFL is expected to announce today or Friday that the league will be expanded by two cities, with the new teams beginning play in 1993.

The expansion process was officially put in motion at the NFL owners meeting in March when NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue named realignment and expansion committees.

Seattle to build an arena

SEATTLE (AP) — The Seattle city council voted 7-0 to approve construction of a sports and entertainment arena to be built by Seattle SuperSonics owner Barry Ackerley. Ackerley agreed to spend at least $100 million on the arena, sign a 30-year lease with the Sonics and construct a 1,800-stall parking garage. In return, the city will rebate admission taxes to Ackerley of up to $1 million a year.

Ellington downs Manchester Legion

By HERALD STAFF

ELLINGTON — It was another forgettable night for the Manchester Legion Post 102 baseball contingent.

With the game tied at 1-all, Ellington scored five times in the fourth and went on to post an 8-1 win over Manchester in Zone Eight play at Ellington High School.

Ellington is 14-8 while Manchester falls to 6-15, 9-25.

Post 102 will host Windsor Locks Saturday at 4 p.m. at Moriarty Field and entertain Jewett City in a non-Zone doubleheader Sunday beginning at 4 p.m.

"Win or lose, we had a strong eight or nine good games going," Manchester coach Dave Morency said. "Last night, we just came flat. It's something we've avoided lately. We didn't come mentally or physically to play."

A two-run single by Rob Mally and three-run triple by Kent Zahner keyed the five-run Ellington fifth. Steve Joyner drove in the lone Manchester run.

Brian Ogoe had two hits to lead Manchester while Don Sauer and Matt Helin each singled.

Grissom a marquee player for the Expos

By The Associated Press

Marquis Grissom hit a marquee shot that kept the Montreal Expos in the thick of the National League East race.

The rookie outfielder, who singled and scored the tying run in the bottom of the ninth, hit his first home run of the season in the 10th, a three-run shot that gave the Expos an 8-7 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates on Wednesday night.

Grissom's homer off rookie Stan Belinda (2-3) came after the Pirates had scored all their runs in the final four innings, including two in the top of the ninth to go ahead 4-3 and three in the 10th for a 7-4 lead. But they couldn't hold either lead.

"It was the biggest hit of my career," Grissom said of his second major-league homer. "With the count 3-2 I was looking for a fastball, and that's what I got. It was a little down, but it was hittable. I didn't think at first it was going out, but when I looked up it was gone."

The Pirates' lead over New York was trimmed to one-half game when the Mets survived a six-run ninth inning and beat Philadelphia 10-9. Montreal is five games out.

Elsewhere, San Diego swept a double-header from Cincinnati 2-1 and 10-4, San Francisco beat Los Angeles 7-2, St. Louis trounced Chicago 9-0 and Houston defeated Atlanta 5-1.

Grissom's second career homer capped a see-saw battle that saw the Pirates score all their runs in the last four innings after being shut out for six innings by Zane Smith.

Jose Lind and Andy Van Slyke had RBI singles in the top of the 10th as Pittsburgh scored three times. But Bob Patterson hit Tim Raines with a pitch in the bottom of the 10th and was relieved by Stan Belinda.

Belinda (2-3) walked Tim Wallach and retired Mike Aldrete on a fly ball. But Andres Galarraga singled Raines home and Grissom lined a 3-2 pitch over the left-center-field fence. The victory went to rookie Bill Sampen (8-2), who pitched two-thirds of an inning.

Lind and Jay Bell had RBI singles as the Pirates scored twice in the ninth for a 4-3 lead. But Grissom led off the bottom of the ninth with a single off Scott Ruskin and scored on pinch hitter Junior Noboa's double. Dave Martinez hit his career-high ninth home run in the fifth.

Mets 10, Phillies 9: Dave Magadan and Darryl Strawberry hit two-run homers and Kevin McReynolds and Gregg Jefferies had two-run triples as New York rapped out nine extra-base hits and then withstood a ninth-inning barrage of singles.

McReynolds' triple in the fifth inning and an RBI single by Magadan in the sixth followed two-out intentional walks. After Magadan's single made it 5-0, Jefferies tripled and Strawberry hit his 25th home run, a drive measured at 469 feet.

The Mets made it 10-3 in the ninth off Joe Boever on McReynolds' two-out double and Mackey Sasser's single. But the Phillies hit seven straight ground-ball singles to start a six-run bottom of the ninth and left the tying run at third when Tom Herr lined out to shortstop Mario Diaz, giving John Franco his 23rd save.

The Mets' 14-hit attack backed the pitching of Sid Fernandez (7-6), who gave up two runs — one unearned — and six hits while striking out nine in seven innings. Loser Jeff Parrett (3-9) yielded four runs and seven hits in five innings.

Padres 2-10, Reds 1-4: Mike Pagliarulo drove in five runs with a triple and double and San Diego slowed down Cincinnati's NL West runaway with a season-high 20 hits in the nightcap.

The Padres, who had dropped eight straight and 12 of 13 before Tuesday night's 10-0 victory, won the opener 2-1 behind the six-hit pitching of Ed Whitson (8-7) and Craig Lefferts. That gave them two consecutive victories for the first time in more than a month.

Calvin Schiraldi (3-2), making his first start of the year in place of sore-shouldered Andy Benes, gave up two runs and five hits in six innings of the second game.

Giants 7, Dodgers 2: Matt Williams regained the major-league RBI lead with a three-run homer in the first inning as San Francisco snapped a season-high six-game losing streak. Scott Garrelts (8-7) yielded two runs and eight hits in seven innings-plus and won for the seventh time in his last eight decisions.

Will Clark broke out of a 2-for-21 slump with three hits, including a pair of doubles and a run-scoring single in the Giants' three-run sixth. Kevin Mitchell hit his 25th home run in the ninth, tying Chicago's Ryne Sandberg and New York's Darryl Strawberry for the NL lead.

Williams followed a first-inning leadoff single by Brett Butler and a two-run wild shot to Mitchell with his 20th homer against Mike Morgan (8-9). Williams has 83 RBIs, one more than Detroit's Cecil Fielder.

Cardinals 9, Cubs 0: John Tudor (9-3) pitched a five-hitter for his fourth consecutive victory and first shutout since June 23, 1988, and hit a three-run double in an eight-run first inning. Tudor's double, his first RBIs of the season, keyed the Cardinals' biggest inning since June 11, 1989, also against the Cubs.

Astros 5, Braves 1: Danny Darwin pitched a five-hitter, equaled his career high with 10 strikeouts and singled a run home and Eric Yelding had a career-high four hits and drove in two runs as Houston won for only the third time in its last 26 road games.

McEnroe loses cool, hits foe

TORONTO — John McEnroe admits his latest tantrum was a "very uncool thing to do."

McEnroe, expelled from the Australian Open in January for misconduct, drilled Grant Connell in the back of the neck with a tennis ball Wednesday at the $1.5 million Player's International tennis tournament.

"I've never done that once in all my time hitting balls (in anger)," said an apologetic McEnroe, who won the match. "I never dreamed I would do something like that. I don't know what's going to happen to me next."

In the eighth game of the first set, the third-seeded McEnroe botched a volley. In familiar style, he struck the ball furiously with his racket and it hit Connell as he was walking toward the service line with his back turned.

McEnroe was a 7-6 (7-4), 6-1 winner in the second-round battle of left-handers.

Connell remained cool.

"I realized he didn't line the ball up and drill it at my neck," Connell said. "I was shocked, but I realized the scenario and he was apologetic."

McEnroe meets 13th-seeded Amos Mansdorf of Israel in the third round today. Mansdorf had an easy time with Australia's Jason Stoltenberg, 6-2, 6-2.

Top seed Andre Agassi entertained a large center-court crowd on a hot, sunny afternoon with a 6-3, 6-7 (5-7), 6-3 win over Michael Stich of West Germany.

Changes

Under the plan, playing seasons would be limited to no more than 22 weeks and competition and practice to no more than 20 hours per week and four hours per day. Athletic dormitories would be phased out over a five-year period and limitations would be placed on training table meals. Scholarships would be cut in football from the present 95 to 85 by 1994, and in basketball from the present 15 to 13 by 1993. All other sports would take 10 percent cuts across the board except for women's gymnastics, women's tennis and women's volleyball, which would retain current levels.

Other parts of the presidents' proposal call for one mandatory day off per week from all sports related activity; no class time missed for practice, except for travel to a road game; and elimination of preseason off-campus intrasquad games.

In other words, the emphasis in the term student-athlete would be on the student, not the athlete.

Martin Massengale, interim president of the University of Nebraska and chairman of the Presidents Commission, anticipates some opposition to these rather dramatic measures when they are presented at the convention.

"I think there will be people of different viewpoints," he said. "There will not be unanimimity. I think we can work our way through them. This is a strong statement, I think, because it came from the commissioners."

For some academic people, the changes are already evident.

Anna Price, assistant athletic director for academics and student services at Miami, sees a bright future for the co-existence of sports and studies.

"I believe more people are sincere about this and we're better than we're portrayed," Price said. "It used to be that the academics area of the athletic department was manned by ex-coaches who were not familiar with academic support services. That's changed.

"People think we need to correct things. I believe they're already being corrected. The academics part is being cleaned up and it is a model for the rest of the university."

Michael Beachley, academic coordinator for athletes at Oregon State, welcomes the new direction and the promise it brings for improved academic performance.

"I am an educator," Beachley said. "I hope it changes. It has to, ethically. The Presidents Commission assures us that it will. If it doesn't, we're not conducting business as educational institutions. And that's what our priority ought to be."

Ryan

"I don't think I'll be out the whole season," he said. "But I'll be out awhile."

It was the most runs Ryan had given up this year.

"It's my poorest performance since coming off the disabled list and I was hoping for the opposite," Ryan said. "The Yankees came out aggressive and came out swinging."

Ryan threw 141 pitches and pitching coach Tom House said he was trying too hard.

"If he were a rookie, I'd say he was overthrowing," House said. "I guess he got a little too excited and a little too nervous."

Ryan's wife, Ruth, said "Nolan was nervous. He couldn't even take a nap this afternoon."

When Ryan got hit 5,000th strikeout last year, he missed the turn into Arlington Stadium before the game.

"I wish I had missed the turn tonight and kept on going," he said.

Mattingly may miss rest of year

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — As if enough hasn't already gone wrong for the New York Yankees this season.

Now, the worst team in the major leagues may not have Don Mattingly for the rest of the season.

Mattingly missed Wednesday night's game and was to return to New York today for treatment of back problems that have hurt him and the team all year.

"I know they're going to put me on the disabled list. I'll just be sent home to take a week off and start rehabilitation," Mattingly said.

Mattingly, however, said he did not believe he would miss the remainder of the season.

"I don't think so," he said. "I hope not."

But Yankees manager Stump Merrill isn't so sure he'll be back.

Asked whether the six-time All-Star first baseman could be out for the remainder of the year, Merrill said, "I wouldn't rule it out.

"It's an ongoing problem," Merrill said. "I didn't want to risk it at this point in the season."

Mattingly, who signed a $19.3 million, guaranteed five-year contract extension the day before the season started, has been bothered by back spasms for several months and has struggled at the plate. He is batting only .245 with five home runs and 35 RBIs and has not homered since May 20, a span of 210 at-bats that is the longest drought of his career.

Mattingly began the season as a .323 careerhitter. He averaged 27 home runs and 114 RBIs in his last six years.

Mattingly missed seven straight games before the All-Star break.

"I don't think I've really been right since the break," Mattingly said. "Last night, I took a swing and my back locked up on me. Today, I couldn't twist or anything."

The Yankees, for now, listed Matingly's status was day-to-day. But while the team travels to Cleveland for a doubleheader Friday, Mattingly is going home.

The Yankees have slumped without Mattingly to a 34-60 record. They lost to Texas 9-7 in 11 innings Wednesday — a game in which Nolan Ryan failed to win his 300th game.

Mattingly is being paid $2.5 million this season, the last year of a three-year contract.

Town softball tourneys set

MANCHESTER — The Manchester Rec Department's Town 'A', 'B' and 'C' slow pitch softball tournaments will begin on Wednesday night, Aug. 8, at Charter Oak, Robertson Park, Nike Field and Pagani Field.

Twenty four teams, eight in each division, qualify for the tournaments.

The double elimination tournaments run from Aug. 8 through Aug. 22

Games will be at 6 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

The 'A' division tournament will have the top four teams from each of the Delaney and Rodyan leagues. Play will be at Charter Oak and Robertson Park.

The 'B' division tourney will have the first and second place teams and two best third-place records from the Rec, Charter Oak and Nike leagues. Play will be at Charter Oak and Nike Field.

The 'C' division tourney will have the league champ and runner-up teams from the Norther, Dusty, West Side and Pagani Leagues. Play will be at Pagani and Robertson Park.

The Women's Rec League double elimination playoffs will begin Tuesday (July 31) at 6 p.m. at Charter Oak Field No. 1.

The top four teams from the regular season qualify for the playoffs. Play runs through Aug. 9.

Locals do well at Games

WILLIMANTIC — Aaron Dixon of Manchester, a 1990 Manchester High graduate, was among the winners in the opening round of wrestling Wednesday at the Numeg State Games at Eastern Connecticut State University.

Dixon won his opening match in the 160-pound division.

Elsewhere, P.J. Monahan of Enfield, who'll be a junior at East Catholic High, had 20 points but his North squad fell to the West, 88-82, in boys' scholastic basketball. The North downed the West, 102-81, in the men's open division basketball play. Jack Ayer of Coventry, who sat out his freshman season at University of Hartford after suffering a knee injury, had 11 points for the North.

Burrell debut a success

ST. CATHARINES, Ont. — Scott Burrell made a successful debut in professional baseball Wednesday night as he pitched 2 2/3 shutout innings for the St. Catharines Blue Jays of the Class A New York-Penn League.

Burrell of Hamden, who'll be a sophomore at the University of Connecticut in the fall where he still intends on playing basketball, struck out three and walked two in his debut. He was held to a 45-pitch limit.

"I was happy with the way I pitched," Burrell said. "I think the most important things I did tonight were pitching well and just making the first step toward getting back in the swing of playing baseball."

It was just a hoax, folks

HARTFORD — A report on WVIT-TV, Channel 30, and on WTIC Radio Wednesday that the Hartford Whalers had traded Kevin Dineen and Ray Ferraro to the Los Angeles Kings for Luc Robitaille was just a hoax.

Channel 30, on its 6 p.m. newscast, announced the trade.

"We got a call from someone who said he was Phil Langan of the Whalers telling me about the trade," WVIT news director Paul Frega said. "The guy knew the routine, said he was faxing the releases to everyone. I told Tony Terzi and he went with it. It was a stupid thing to do. If it hadn't been two or three minutes before air time..."

Baldwin out with Minnesota

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — When Howard Baldwin wasn't even allowed to order office supplies, he knew he was team president by title only and decided to leave the Minnesota North Stars.

Baldwin said Wednesday that he had resigned as president and, though he will retain his 24.5 percent share of the team — which cost him about $7.6 million — he would no longer be an active contributor.

He said Norman Green, who bought 51 percent of the club last month to make minority owners of original partners Baldwin and Morris Belzberg, fell in love with the idea of controlling day-to-day operations of an NHL franchise.

Barr booed by San Diego crowd

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Comedienne Roseanne Barr was booed by the crowd Wednesday night when she sang the national anthem in an off-beat manner and then made an obscene gesture between games of a Reds-Padres doubleheader.

Barr, star of the "Roseanne" television sitcom on ABC, covered her ears with her hands at the start of the anthem and then sang in a shrill voice to the disfavor of a crowd of approximately 30,000 fans present for "Working Women's Night" at Jack Murphy Stadium.

When the boos started, observers said, Barr made an obscene gesture and spit on the ground.

Barr's husband, Tom Arnold, later made a ceremonial pitch with no reaction, but when Barr left the field with him, she continued to receive boos as she waved to the crowd.

Engel announces retirement

BAKERSFIELD, Calif. (AP) — Bob Engel hoped to continue his umpiring career a few more years before he retired.

Then he was charged with stealing baseball cards.

"It's one or two years earlier than I planned," Engel, his voice wavering with emotion, said Wednesday in announcing his retirement.

"It's hard for me to imagine a life without baseball."

Earlier in the day, Engel pleaded no contest to charges of stealing baseball cards.

A major league umpire since 1965, Engel was charged with stealing cards from one store in his hometown of Bakersfield and trying to steal cards from a second store.

Engel, who entered the no-contest plea through his attorney, was sentenced to three years' probation and ordered to perform 40 hours of community service.

Stewart to oppose Tyson

NEW YORK (AP) — Boxer Alex Stewart sat quietly, absorbing the bluster that is part and parcel of a Don King press conference.

"Without struggle," King announced to his flock, "there is no reward."

The next struggle for Stewart is Mike Tyson, Sept. 22 at Trump Plaza in Atlantic City. The reward could be substantial progress in the heavyweight rankings.

"This is the second leg of the journey on the road back," King continued. "Mike Tyson, trying to reclimb the mountain. The road back is always difficult."

And on the promoter went, dazzling the audience with his usual bombastic string of adjectives and pronouns. Stewart, who had not previously seen the act, was suitably impressed. "Breathtaking," was the way he described it. "He's too much."

Canseco, Brett tearing up AL pitching

By KEN RAPPOPORT
The Associated Press

Jose Canseco is on a long-ball tear. George Brett is just tearing it up, period.

Wielding the hottest bats in baseball, those two are virtually carrying their respective teams these days — Canseco with the Oakland Athletics and Brett with the Kansas City Royals.

Canseco hit his 30th and 31st home runs and drove in six runs Wednesday to lead the Athletics to a 13-3 victory over the California Angels. The sizzling Brett, just recently named the American League Player of the Week, hit for the cycle as the Kansas City Royals beat the Toronto Blue Jays 6-1.

"This is good now, but it can get better," said Canseco, who is batting .415 (22-for-53) with nine home runs and 21 RBIs since the All-Star Game. "I'm seeing the ball well. I have to capitalize on it."

Brett, meanwhile, hit in his 15th straight game. In that stretch, he is 29-for-63, a .460 pace.

Athletics 13, Angels 3: Canseco, who has seven home runs in his last eight games, launched a monster 485-foot blast into the last rows of the left field bleachers at the Oakland Coliseum with a three-run homer off Bert Blyleven (8-6) in the first inning.

Blyleven hit Canseco with a pitch the next time up and the two exchanged words. Canseco then rocketed a 2-0 pitch into center field, the third time in the last seven games he homered twice.

After grounding out in the sixth, Canseco drove in two more runs with a bases-loaded single in Oakland's five-run seventh.

"That ranked among one of the longest here (at the Oakland Coliseum)," Canseco said of his first home run of the night. "Anywhere else it might have traveled another 100 feet ... I enjoyed it because it put us ahead. My main concern is helping the A's score runs, get ahead. Chicago lost today so it's a double-killing."

The victory was Oakland's fourth straight and gave the A's a four-game lead in the West over the White Sox, their biggest lead since June 20.

Royals 6, Blue Jays 1: Brett collected a single in the first and a triple in the third, both off Blue Jays starter Todd Stottlemyre. Brett doubled off reliever Frank Wills in the fifth, then homered off Wills in the seventh, his sixth of the season, to give the Royals a 6-0 lead.

The last time Brett hit for the cycle was against the Baltimore Orioles on May 28, 1979. It marked the sixth time a Royals player has accomplished the feat.

Andy McGaffigan (1-0), making his first start since 1986, allowed two hits over five innings to gain the win. Todd Stottlemyre (9-11) lost his fourth straight start.

"I thought I'd give it one shot for the homer," Brett said. "But when it was 0-2, I was just trying to make contact. You would think after 17 years I would know by now that I'm not a home run hitter. I don't know what he threw at 0-2, but I do know that I hit it good."

Indians 6, White Sox 1: Bud Black pitched a three-hitter and Dion James' two-run triple highlighted a four-run third inning for Cleveland.

Black (9-5), winning for the third time in four starts, struck out eight, walked two and retired 22 of the last 24 batters as the Indians won for just the second time in 10 games.

James' one-out triple off Eric King (8-3) in the third capped the inning.

Tigers 4, Orioles 3: Larry Sheets' two-run homer in the eighth inning broke a 2-2 tie.

Mike Henneman (6-6) went 1 2-3 innings in relief of Steve Searcy. Jerry Don Gleaton got the last out for his fourth save.

Bob Milacki (4-7) gave up five hits in seven innings.

Tony Phillips opened the eighth with an infield single. Mark Williamson relieved Milacki with a 1-2 count to Cecil Fielder, and struck him out. Phillips then stole second and Sheets hit a 3-2 pitch into the right-field upper-deck.

Baltimore's final run came on Mike Devereaux's ninth-inning homer, the third straight game in which he has connected.

Twins 6, Mariners 0: Rookie Kevin Tapani won his 10th and Gary Gaetti hit his 11th homer and drove in three runs for Minnesota.

Tapani (10-5), pitching for the first time since sustaining a shin injury July 13, gave up just five hits in 7 2-3 innings. John Candelaria got the last four outs for his fourth save, finishing up a combined five-hitter.

Tapani's strong outing overshadowed a 10-strikeout performance by Randy Johnson, including five straight in the first and second innings. Johnson (9-6) struck out seven of the first 13 batters he faced, but that's when the Twins scored their first two runs.

'Air Jordan' no slouch with the bat, either

By COLLEEN DISKIN
The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan isn't ready to hang up his sneakers for a pair of spikes, but the Chicago Bulls' star has proven he's no slouch with a baseball bat or a golf club.

Jordan is one of the better golfers among those whom earn their living playing team sports. And, on Wednesday he showed what he could do on a baseball diamond.

Joining the Chicago White Sox in batting practice, Jordan — who routinely scores 30 and 40 points and more in Bulls' games — knocked two practice pitches into the left field stands at Comiskey Park.

"Fire not being able to play for about eight or nine years, it really felt comfortable," Jordan said. "I'm very pleased with the way I performed, hitting two home runs and all."

"I was more impressed with him on the mound than I was at the plate," Patterson said. "He had some real power, upper 80s at least. That's pretty good for a guy who said he hasn't pitched a baseball in two or three years."

Jordan thinks he could have made it as a pitcher.

Wearing a numberless uniform, the 6-foot-6-inch Jordan took the first three pitches from bullpen coach Dave LaRoche before he stroked one to center field.

Jordan then answered the crowd's chants with two home runs, one narrowly missing the upper deck. It's 374 feet to the left field alley and 341 feet down the left field line.

"I've always been a pull hitter," Jordan, a right-hander, said after the batting practice. "I took some pretty good pitches. It was fun. It really was."

As for golf, Jordan said, "When I first played, I thought it was a sissy sport, and then I found out it was difficult."

Now, he plays as much golf as his schedule permits.

"I never thought I'd love it like I do," he added.

Jordan plays golf almost every day since the NBA season is over, and every day he can during the season.

His hand-eye and athletic coordination have helped him overcome his long arms and 6-6 body — atypical of a golfer.

"Sometimes he plays like a basketball player playing golf," said Peter de Young, tournament manager of the Western Open and a frequent playing companion. "Then other times ..."

Some speculate that Jordan could make it on the pro golf circuit. But having played the game only about five years, Jordan said that for now he's merely concentrating on improving his game, especially putting.

"Put put is the money shot," he said.

Lewis still has the jump on rest of the world

By BARRY WILNER
The Associated Press

SEATTLE — In the cold and wind, Carl Lewis stayed hot enough to continue the most impressive streak in track and field.

Lewis won his 64th consecutive long jump competition, taking the Goodwill Games gold Wednesday night with a leap of 27 feet, 6 inches. It was far from Lewis' best, but it was the best anyone could manage in the blustery conditions.

"We didn't have the great performances out there today, it was definitely cold out there," said Lewis, who redeemed himself somewhat for losing the 100-meter dash to Leroy Burrell on Monday. "I don't jump well in this cold."

Neither did anyone else. Despite facing an impressive field that included three other 28-foot jumpers, Lewis won with his decent but unspectacular effort.

"I'm in excellent shape, it's just not there yet," Lewis said. "I've done so much this year, my focus has been on so many things. I've had a very busy summer."

Lewis has been promoting his autobiography and making appearances throughout the country. "Now, with the book tour settled down, I've been able to settle down and focus on my events."

The focus at the Goodwill Games on Wednesday also was on the basketball court, where the United States routed Italy 113-76 to make the medals round. The Americans, who lost to the Soviet Union the previous night, face Brazil on Friday, while the Soviets play Yugoslavia.

The last time the U.S. national team played the Brazilians on American soil, Oscar Schmidt led the visitors to an upset in the Pan American Games final. Schmidt had a Goodwill Games-record 42 points in a win over Australia on Wednesday.

Two other American teams had mixed results. The women's volleyball squad beat Cuba 15-2, 15-5, 15-6 in the classification round. But the men's water polo team fell 7-6 to the Soviets, blowing a 4-1 lead.

Tonight marks the international debut of the Soviet national baseball team, which plays the United States.

Track and Field: Lewis got off his winning jump on his third try — the 36th straight outdoor meet he has cleared 27 feet. He outdistanced Mike Powell, Robert Emmiyan of the Soviet Union and Jaime Jefferson of Cuba. It was the second time in nine days Powell was beaten by Lewis.

"I thought I had a golden opportunity to win it and I got a little greedy," Powell said. "Every time you lose, it's a learning experience, and today was a big one."

Powell was most disappointed because Lewis didn't need to get off the big one to win.

"That ranks in the bottom two percent of the 64," Lewis said. "That's for sure. I thought I should have jumped farther. It was ridiculous.

"I think the thing more important than the streak is that I have been able to put together so many different jumps in so many different conditions."

While the poor weather hurt the long jumpers, it probably helped keep decathlete Dave Johnson a little fresher. Johnson had enough left in the javelin and 1,500 meters to pass Dan O'Brien and win the event.

O'Brien had led through nine events, but Johnson finished more than 10 seconds in front of his American teammate in the 1,500, and that was enough.

"The weather kept things down and made it close and it was a lot of fun," Johnson said.

Other track winners included Americans Randy Barnes, the world record-holder, who captured the shot put at 70-4¼, and Dannette Young in the women's 200 in 22.64.

Moroccan Hammou Boutayeb, 34, produced the fastest time ever in the United States, 27 minutes, 26.43 seconds, in the men's 10,000.

Basketball: It was an easy day's night, and an easy night for Todd Day, as the United overwhelmed Italy.

Day scored 15 points, four more than he had in the first two games combined, and frustrated Italian sharpshooter Antonello Riva into a 6-for-16 effort from the field and 21 points.

"Coach (Mike Krzyzewski) told us we were going to fullcourt pressure defense, and most of the guys on this team play that in school," Day said, "so you should have seen the eyes in the room light up when he said that."

"Day started to cover Riva in the locker room," Italian coach Alessandro Gamba said. "All the Americans played such good defense that for some of my players, the ground started to shake under them when they had the ball."

PGA loses more sponsors as battle lines are drawn

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Mayor Richard Arrington took up the peace pipe as television advertisers and black leaders drew battle lines over racial exclusion at the Shoal Creek country club, host of next month's PGA Championship.

Toyota and Anheuser-Busch on Wednesday joined IBM in canceling plans to run ads during the ABC and ESPN telecasts. Toyota and IBM officials said they pulled the spots because the Shoal Creek club has no white members. Anheuser-Busch did not give a reason for dropping its ads during the golf tournament Aug. 9-12.

Arrington, faced with the possibility of blacks picketing the nationally televised championship, tried to smooth ruffled feathers and make clear Birmingham has become racially progressive in the past two decades.

The mayor said a letter Tuesday from Shoal Creek officials convinced him that the club, in Shelby County near Birmingham, would adhere to a non-discriminatory policy.

Officials at Shoal Creek, founded in 1977 and site of the 1984 Professional Golfer's Association Championship, have said the club does not ban black members and that blacks have been guests there.

But club founder Hall Thompson angered many when he was quoted in a newspaper story as saying the club could not be pressured into accepting blacks. He later apologized and said he was quoted out of context.

New members must be invited to join. Memberships cost up to $35,000, with an additional yearly fee.

"We're concerned and disappointed about the actions of the advertisers ... in light of the PGA's position against discrimination," said a PGA official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Reacting to the controversy, the PGA announced July 14 that it would in the future consider clubs' membership policies in picking tournament sites.

On Tuesday, IBM officials said the company dropped its PGA spots from ABC. Toyota officials said Wednesday the company canceled plans to run ads on ESPN and spots in major cities on ABC because of the racial exclusion.

Jeff Davis, a spokesman for Anheuser-Busch in St. Louis, said Wednesday a "corporate decision" was made to drop plans for ads on ESPN during the PGA telecast. The company's prepared statement did not disclose the reason for the change, he said.

ESPN is broadcasting the first two days of the golf tournament, with ABC carrying the last two days.

The Rev. Abraham Woods, who has called for picketing of the tournament, said Wednesday the club should at least "set a timetable for actively recruiting blacks."

Arrington, who doesn't play golf, said earlier he is "not the country-club type." He is now in his third term as Birmingham's first black mayor.

Fans say Pete Rose belongs in baseball's Hall of Fame

By GARY LANGER
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Americans say Pete Rose deserves a place in two venerable institutions: the federal prison system and the Baseball Hall of Fame.

Eighty-one percent in a national Associated Press poll said it was right for Rose, baseball's all-time hit leader, to be sentenced to federal prison last week. He got a five-month term for cheating on his taxes.

At the same time, a majority said Rose should be allowed to work in baseball again, even though he was banished from the sport for gambling last year. And two-thirds said he deserved election to the Hall of Fame.

Most respondents also said Rose's problems did little to damage his sport. Fifty-six percent said he had not hurt baseball's image, and among those who said he had done damage, only about a third said it was serious.

Rose, 49, ex-manager of the Cincinnati Reds, can apply for reinstatement, and 63 percent said he should get it at some point.

Rose becomes eligible in December 1991 for election to the Hall of Fame. With 4,256 hits in a 24-year career, he was virtually assured of the honor before he ran afoul of the baseball commissioner and the law. His chances now are less certain.

The poll did not specify an election date for Rose, asking only if he should be named to the Hall of Fame "at some point." Baseball fans were a bit more likely than non-fans to favor him for the hall, 71 to 63 percent, and men were more supportive than women, 74 to 62 percent.

Women also were slightly more likely than men to say Rose had damaged baseball's image, 43 to 36 percent. But men were a bit harder on Rose in other areas: Men were more likely than women to say he deserved jail time, 85-78 percent. And while 67 percent of women said Rose should be allowed back into baseball at some point, that fell to 59 percent of men.

In most cases, opinion was roughly the same among respondents who called themselves baseball fans as among non-fans. Fifty-four percent said they were fans, including 61 percent of the men and 48 percent of the women.

The telephone survey of 1,004 adults was conducted for the AP from Friday through Tuesday by ICR Survey Research Group of Media, Pa., part of AUS Consultant Cos. The poll has a margin of error of plus or minus three percentage points.
