Bears Note Saying Missing Man Is Prisoner in Shack; Police Divided as to Gen- uineness.

New York, June 10.—Not any too confident of success, the authorities today again followed up a "carrier pigeon clue" to the mysterious disappearance of Walter S. Ward.

This clue was given to the police when a carrier pigeon dropped exhausted in Bryn Athyn, Pa., yesterday. A note, signed "Ward," was attached to the pigeon's leg. It said "Ward" was held prisoner in a shack three miles above Trenton, N. J.

Some Detectives were inclined this morning to believe the note a hoax. Others thought it might possibly lead to solving the case. For hours last evening, the state police of New Jersey and Pennsylvania had searched without success, the cottages and shacks on both sides of the Delaware river, for miles above and below Trenton.

They discovered the body of Madame Pettine locked in a box. The body was removed for an autopsy which showed that Madame Pettine died from revolver wounds, probably about February 12. Renzo, after his mother disappeared in February, had explained to his friends and to his father that she was taking a holiday out of Milan. Meanwhile the police have learned that Renzo had cashed his mother's alimony checks and had entertained girls rather lavishly in the apartment where his mother's body lay. THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1926.

BINGHAM WAS RIGHT.

There are two aspects of the Iowa primary affair. In one is presented the situation as it was on Monday, with Brookhart, appealing to the voters of the Republican party on a straight-out anti-administration platform, fighting Cummins, backed by the administration, and at the end of the day proving winner by a great plurality. The other goes back to the occasion, a few weeks ago, when New England senators under the direction of W. M. Butler of Massachusetts joined with Democrats to kick this same Brookhart out of a seat in the Senate to which the official returns of the state of Iowa had declared him to be elected.

Let there be ever so much difference of opinion as to what caused the Iowa voters to fall upon and rend their venerable and long venerated senior senator, there can be absolutely no question of the truth of this: The disaster of Monday could not possibly have occurred if Brookhart had been permitted to keep his seat, because in that event he would not have been running in the Iowa primaries at all, and there is no one else in his state who could have done what he has now done to Cummins. So that the whole wretched business traces directly to the high handed proceeding of voting a senator out of his job merely to get rid of him and his noisy opposition.

It will be remembered that our own junior senator, Hiram Bingham, did not approve of this steam roller proceeding. He did not take his orders from Mr. Butler of Massachusetts. He did not vote to unseat Brookhart. He voted to keep him in his seat, though no two senators could be further apart in their economic views.

We said at that time, and we say now, that Senator Bingham, in this Brookhart business, exhibited ten times the sheer political sagacity shown by those exponents of frightfulness who, pretending to represent the administration, arrogate to themselves the right to bully the Congress majority in every matter of party policy.

If the Senate Republicans had had the good sense to be advised on that fatal day by Connecticut's junior senator, there would have been no Iowa tragedy to regret, for there would have been no Brookhart in the ring. Bingham had foresight. Butler and his crowd had no more of it than a mole.

OWE IT NOTHING.

The governor's special committee of investigation of the affairs of G. Harold Gilpatrick, former state treasurer, has arrived at two important conclusions, one of which has seemed obvious enough to the people of the state for a long time; the other has been less well understood but is scarcely less momentous.

The committee finds that when $220,000 of the funds of the Putnam bank of which Gilpatrick was cashier was used to buy bonds owing to the state treasury, "it was only a restoration of property previously appropriated" and therefore the bank has no claim on the state with relation to these bonds.

This, it has always seemed to us, was perfectly clear. Gilpatrick, acting in his capacity of cashier of the bank in dealing with the state treasury, was not an individual but the bank itself. That institution was responsible for his every act as its cashier. It was the bank which accepted the state's money for bonds and then failed to deliver them. It was the bank which did finally, after long delay, make good the shortage which it owed to the state.

It was not G. Harold Gilpatrick the individual, for the state treasury had no dealings with any such person—it dealt with the First National Bank of Putnam.

That there were internal manipulations within the bank itself and that this G. Harold Gilpatrick stole from one part of the bank to make good the obligations of another part does not in the least involve the state of Connecticut's status as the bank's creditor.

All this is perfectly logical and this is what the special committee finds.

What is less well understood is how auditors of the state of Connecticut, under the slightest realization of their responsibilities, could have been guilty of the amazing dereliction with which the committee, in surprising mild terms, charges them. The report criticizes State Auditor William P. Bailey and former State Auditor James P. Tobin for passing over a delayed delivery of $100,000 in bonds, not once but twice, the first time when the delivery was three months overdue and the second time when it was fifteen months overdue, and in addition to this passing over a second shortage of delivery involving an item of $200,000, ten months delayed.

The report of the committee ought to settle for good the question of any claim by the Putnam bank against the state of Connecticut. But it is a long way from settling in any right way the obvious problem of business-like audit of state accounts. This Gilpatrick fiasco might have been greatly minimized and a deal of loss and trouble averted, apparently, if the auditors in question had done their duty in the way that auditors are supposed to do it.

MELLON.

Mr. Mellon's achievement in so handling the affairs of the Treasury that the maturing of short time obligations on June 15 can be met without any new financing whatever, is one to which, in the circumstances, probably no other secretary of the treasury in modern times could have attained.

It is not that Mr. Mellon makes money appear out of the air, by magic, or that he does anything mysterious or occult in the conduct of his department. But he does things that nobody but a big business man can do.

What he has done in the present instance is to let the Congressional finance committees think it was licking him the while, as a matter of fact, he was licking the committees. He made a magnificently convincing feint for a tax bill that he never dreamed of putting over, and then managed his compromises so skillfully that he got more money for the treasury than anybody in Congress dreamed that it was possible for him to get, or would have let him have if they had suspected for a moment that he could get it under the tax measure that was passed.

Would that we could keep either Andrew W. Mellon or his business double at the head of the government's finances as a permanent arrangement. Unhappily we shall not be able to do that because Mr. Mellon is growing no younger and by and by will quit, in the natural order of things. And he has no double.

BEATING FOR SMITH. It is beginning to be apparent that once more Governor Al Smith of New York is to be "prevailed on" to run again. Almost miraculous vote getter that he has been, if circumstances shape themselves as they now give indications of doing, he will probably prove to be, next fall, the pitcher that went once too often to the well.

Senator Wadsworth is reported, and with every sign of full truth, to desire that Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, be the Republican nominee for governor as running mate of the senator, who will go before the voters of his state in the fall as an out-and-out wet. And the chances are largely that this will meet the views not only of Butler but of the New York state Republican party as well.

Smith's strongest appeal to the people of his state has been as a wet—that and the fact that they have faith in his personal integrity and plain political common sense.

And candidate for governor dictated by the up-state dry Republicans would go down in certain defeat before the redoubtable Al. But Nicholas Murray Butler is a vastly different proposition from that. He is not only an outstanding citizen of the highest rating and almost as well known to the people as Smith himself, but he is even more frankly and scientifically wet than the present governor. He can poll the full strength of the Republican party, except that minute fraction which will bolt to the Anti-Saloon ticket—and without a great many Republican votes Smith cannot be elected governor of New York.

Wadsworth for senator and Butler for governor, on a platform of Volstead law amendment, eventual repeal of the 18th amendment and the institution of the Quebec system, will be an unbeatable ticket.

SHERRY.

Louis Sherry—the famous Sherry—has just died. He was New York's most expert professional host. Multi-millionaires deferred to him. His position in the social life of America was unique. His was the magic touch of a great artist, applied to polite entertainment.

The Delmonicos were cooks. Sherry was a guide, mentor, reliance to New York's upper crust; a gastronomic genius into the bargain.

The professional hosts that the metropolis has developed since the Sherry days are a somewhat different breed. They cater to flush fools and thieves. They purvey savage tom-tom music for savage blood-dances. They sell awful booze at robber prices. They stand in with crooks and fences and gang leaders.

Prohibition put Louis Sherry and his kind of establishments out of business. It has produced the other kind of successors. Louis Sherry's kind of business was not good enough for the Wayne Wheelers to countenance. The present kind seems to be just to their liking.

Stewart's WASHINGTON LETTERS

By CHARLES P. STEWART.

Washington, June 10.—The Prince of Wales is a mighty nice chap, but no one is permitted to forget for a minute that he's a prince. He's quite prepared to be perfectly democratic and unassuming with other folks, but the other folks mustn't make the mistake of getting a bit fresh with him.

You wouldn't recognize Prince Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden as a prince unless you knew it in advance. Washington has had the pleasure of entertaining both Wales and Adolphus within a comparatively short time and feels that it's entitled to be regarded as a good deal of an authority among cities on what princes are like.

Of course, New York gets a crack at all visiting princes. Too, but mysteriously or occult in the conduct of his department. But he does things that nobody but a big business man can do.

Here in Washington a prince has a chance to introduce himself, if he wants to take it. Gustavus did. Wales, so far as the hot polloi was concerned, no. Naturally Washington hollers its head off in enthusiasm for Gustavus. Its sentiments toward Wales, while not hostile, are characterized by no great warmth.

For one thing, Wales was scarcely seen while he was here. He got off his train in the midst of a perfect army of cops, Ay and in uniform. He rode straight to the White House in a closed car. He lunched with the Coolidges and not a few especially selected notables. Then his closed car took him back to the Union Station, where, once more, he was surrounded by a host of cops and streaked it back to New York.

About all that ordinary folks got out of it was a glimpse of his automobile. There's nothing very thrilling about a closed auto, even if there's a prince inside.

Gustavus and his wife, Princess Louise, climbed from their train into a certain amount of police preparation, certainly, but with their marked the arrival of the Prince of Wales.

Then, in plain view, with much escort and a cavalry escort, they journeyed clear across Washington and saw the sights—and he seen. The proletariat appreciates this kind of thing. Gustavus could easily be elected to something if he'd stick around here. In these days of equal suffrage, so could his wife.

From the location the prince and princess presently issued forth for a series of receptions, monument unveilings and tours of museum-galleries and historic spots that kept 'em on the jump as long as they stayed.

Such a program is hard work, but the prince is built to stand it. He overtops Secretary of the Navy Wilbur, who rivals a trolley pole himself, and he's broad in proportion—not fat, but huge.

His English is as perfect as any Englishman's—not an American's—an Englishman's. And nobody ever lived who took on fewer airs. Ditto his wife.

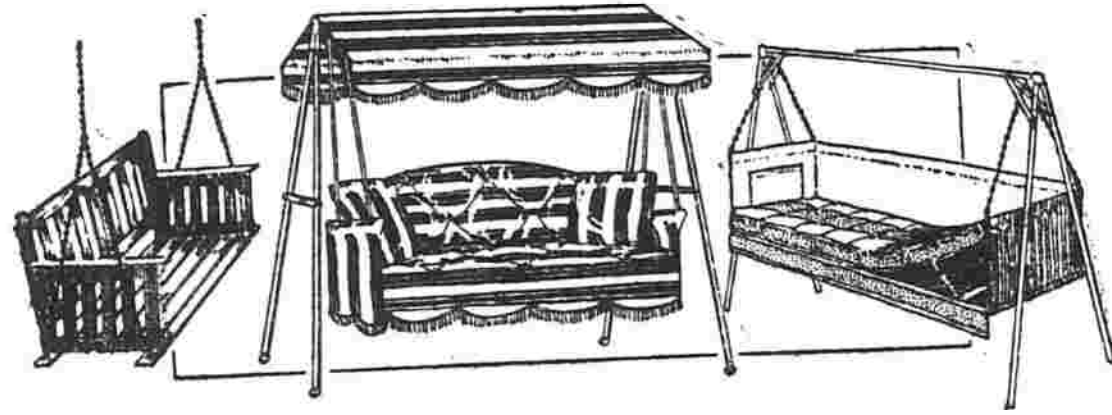

DAILY POEM

PEACE OF MIND When I pass on, and say good-bye—in plainer language, when I die—I wonder what the folk will say—that is, the folk I know to-day. We all, no doubt, have had that thought and, in the spirit of it, caught, have pondered o'er our honest worth to self and others, on this earth. It's nice to think—and then not mind, whatever fault you think they'll find. For if you've played the life game fair, you know, at least, you've done your share. And yet there is a peace of mind in knowing thoughts of you are kind. The man who lives and spreads the smile, makes friends who make it worth while.

IN NEW YORK

New York, June 10.—Such thrills as may lie in dropping a few thousand feet in a parachute or standing on the wing of a speeding airplane are all in a day's work with the men who paint the Woolworth building.

Perched on gargoyles 790 feet above the ground these steeplejacks go about their work with far greater nonchalance than the man crossing a street.

George Cockley, who heads the crew of three now carrying on this precarious task, smiles at the idea of danger. His legs firmly wrapped about a seemingly fragile bit of metal work he sat swinging his paint brush in one hand and waving at me with the other, the first time I encountered him.

For 25 years Cockley has steeplejacked. He says he never feels quite so safe as when he is 500 feet or more above automobile traffic. "The darn streets make me nervous," admitted the man to whom the sky's the limit.

Antics of the steeplejacks attract breathless throngs.

Although the Woolworth is America's best known structure, in all probability, there are a number of little known tales concerning it.

It is built on the site of one Philip Hone's house. Hone is sometimes referred to as "the American Peeps," having kept a famous diary of the period of Irving and Poe. His home was rendezvous for the celebrated folk of the time and Washington Irving was a frequent guest, though Poe is said to have not been on his list.

The architect of the building came from Stockholm. He had hoped, as a boy, to follow the family tradition of going to sea. Migrating to America, after his family had discouraged the sea usage, he studied engineering and draughtsmanship.

Prosperity did not cause him to forget his "old country" friends. Quite the contrary. His first money was sent back to bring over the "girl of his choice," whom he married and "lived happily ever after" with.

—GILBERT SWAN.

QUEER QUIRKS OF NATURE

By ARTHUR N. PACK, President, The American Nature Association.

Snapping turtles there are of more heroic build than our common one of the eastern United States, but none that inch for inch combines more tenacity of life and more uncompromising ferocity.

Just out of the egg, they will snap at anything that disturbs them, and the last act of the life of an old snapper—no one knows how long they do live—is to shut its jaws on some enemy, and refuse to let go even in death.

The life of the snapping turtle begins in some sandy bank where its mother has laid her two or three dozen round rubbery shelled eggs in a hole of her own digging, and after putting down the replaced soil over them, gone on about her leisurely business, leaving the rest to fate.

Nor does the young snapper, on emerging from the shell, waste any time looking for parental help. He merely digs his way out to daylight, and starts out to make a living.

youth, however, he has few enemies to fear during the next hundred years or so. Fish and frog and duckling, and the leaves and fruit of many water plants form a part of his bill of fare.

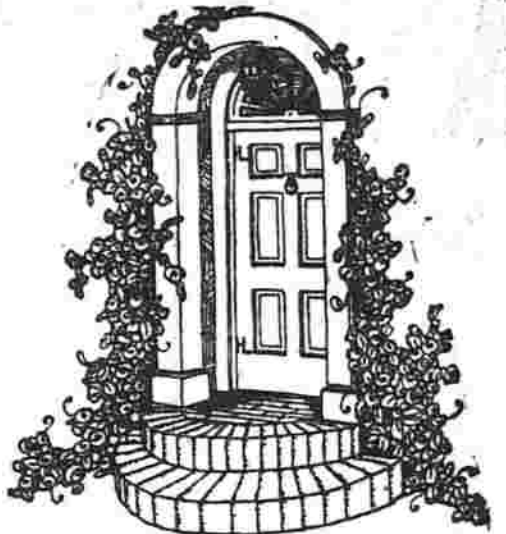

Good authorities state that the snappers do not breed until about 15 years old. This fact alone, if true, would argue that the normal span of life of the snapper is considerable.

The colder months are spent in the depths of some stream or pond, passed. The principal purpose of leaving the water is to lay its eggs, although land excursions are occasionally made with other objects in view.

Through the snapping turtle is not a desirable inhabitant of duck pond or fish pool, it is a part of Nature's great scheme. Its eggs and young form a part of the food marsh and its own flesh forms the basis of a large part of the terrapin soup over which the epicure smacks his lips.

Send a stamped addressed envelope, and questions of fact having to do with Nature will be answered by the consulting staff of Nature Magazine of Washington through arrangements made by this paper.

Manchester has no Girl Scout camp of its own. As in previous years, Hartford Girl Scouts, Inc., have opened their camp, Camp Merritt, at East Hartland, Conn., to Scouts outside Hartford, but they give the following report on the camp: "Camp is now practically full for the entire summer, which means that there are ninety-six Scouts already registered for each of the eight weeks." This camp is open to Scouts of all ages, at a charge of $8 per week. The National Girl Scout organization maintains a camp for girls fourteen and over, Camp Andree Clark, near Briarcliff Manor, New York. Girls from all over the United States attend this camp, which offers exceptional facilities for Girl Scout summer work and play. The charge at this camp is $10 per week. Information in regard to Camp Andree can be obtained from Captain Jamrega, Captain Norton or Captain Shaw, all of whom have attended the camp. Mrs. C. W. Holman and Mrs. F. H. Tydol Gasoline is now protected by sealed pumps

BUYING gasoline from an ordinary gasoline pump is like buying milk from an open can. Any kind of milk can go into the can—any kind of gasoline can go into the pump. That is why the Tydol dealers have united in sealing every Tydol pump in this locality. The sealed pump protects the high quality of Tydol just as the sealed bottle protects the rich, unadulterated milk. Tydol from the sealed pump is virtually gasoline from a sealed container. When the quality of any product is as high as Tydol it invites adulteration and substitution. Only the most extreme care can safeguard such quality. That is why Tide Water developed the sealed pump—which makes it impossible for anyone to put any gasoline except genuine Tydol into the tank which feeds a Tydol pump. The seal on the Tydol pump (examine it the next time you buy gas) is your guarantee that you are getting real Tydol. It means that you are certain to get the split-second

The Tydol dealers in this vicinity have united in sealing every Tydol pump. They want to protect the high quality of the Tydol they sell you. They want to give you visible proof that they are selling genuine Tydol and Tydol alone. start, the dashing pick-up, the rush of sustained power, the increased mileage that have long made Tydol famous among all gasolines. The sealed pump is the final step in protecting Tydol quality from the minute it leaves the refinery until it is safely in the gas tank in your car. Every Tydol pump in this section now sealed. The Tydol dealers of this locality want to forestall any possibility of inferior gasoline being substituted for Tydol. Therefore, they have united in sealing every Tydol pump in this section. Stop today at a Tydol pump. The dealer will be proud to show you how the Tydol pump is sealed. The seal is his proof that he is selling the highest quality gasoline and that he is helping to protect its quality. And the seal is your guarantee of genuine Tydol and the better motoring results that genuine Tydol always insures.

WE asked hundreds of women who have tried White Rose Bread how they liked it. They are women who have kept house for years. Women who have had to plan nourishing meals for growing children and meet the problem of appealing to various family appetites. 82% of them say their families prefer White Rose to any other bread. They like it for its full, sweet, rich flavor. Over and over they speak of the delicious taste, "like home-made." Most of these women mention especially the firm, close-grained texture of White Rose—how evenly it toasts—how it spreads without crumbling and cuts into thin, firm slices for sandwiches. Small families like White Rose for its "keeping qualities." They find it fresh and appetizing the second—even the third day—up to the very last slice. Your grocer has White Rose Bread fresh-baked twice a day. Begin today to give it to your family. See for yourself why so many women prefer this appetizing, nourishing loaf to any other. BEGIN HERE TODAY HARRY MORTON finds himself in a quandary because of his effort to avert the love of his adopted daughter, AUDREY, who wants to marry him. NOVA, a New York stage girl, also loves him, and he brings her to Rochester to disgust Audrey with his way of life. He falls in that, but he finds himself under a social boycott in his home town.

He also has thrown Audrey into the company of JOHN PARRISH, his secretary, and Parrish suddenly proposes to her. She only laughs. Morton, rich, unmarried, middle-aged, and immensely attractive to women, has a flat apartment in New York as well as his home in Rochester.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY (The names and situations in this story are fictitious.) CHAPTER XXXVI

AUDREY looked at him inquiringly. "It's been two years since you left boarding school," Morton said. "Don't you miss your old friends there?"

The girl waited for him to go on. "Suppose," she resumed, "you have a couple of the girls come here to visit and play around?"

Audrey clasped her hands behind her head, and swinging to and fro in her chair, thought over the idea.

"Daddy," she said finally, "I'm ages older than those girls now. I wouldn't know what to say to them. But you're exactly the same age as they are," she objected.

She sighed. "In years, yes. But in experience—" She cast a quick, suspicious glance at him. "Don't laugh at me, daddy! I HAVE had experience, and it has aged me!"

"I'm not laughing," he said, his countenance sober. "I know you're older than those girls now. I wouldn't know what to say to them. But you're exactly the same age as they are," she objected.

"Perhaps," he said, "perhaps." "I'm SURE of it," she told him. "You are a wonderfully fascinating man, you know."

"What's the reason?" he asked. "Because you're indifferent," she said, promptly. "I think you just pretend to be a social wall. Do you know it?"

"What do you mean?" Morton drew up his knee, and clasped his hands around it. "You used to belong to a certain crowd—a group that thought very much as you did. The girls, with nice families and nice ways. You had no men friends aside from me. Now, with this idea of yours that you were in love with me—"

"I AM in love with you," she interrupted. "All right. With this idea that you ARE in love with me, you've tried running away from home, associating with stage girls, learning how they look at life, turning your thoughts into a different channel, and presto! You don't belong to your old crowd any more at all. You're not interested in them. And yet you're not a circus girl, or an actress, or really a dancer. What are you, then?"

The girl pondered a long while. "I suppose I'm a girl who wants her mate, and hasn't got him," she said at last.

Morton gave a short, reminiscent laugh, and she looked at him in surprise.

He hurriedly explained. "I wasn't laughing at you. But I saw another case of an upset soul today."

He told her, with droll commentaries, of his adventure with Mr. and Mrs. Carver, and how he had witnessed the husband should in institute divorce proceedings. Audrey listened gravely.

"At your age, and at about forty, women do wild and peculiar things," he ended.

"That isn't it," she contradicted him calmly. "She really was attracted to you, and wanted to catch your attention," she told him. "I know the feelings. If women can't get the notice of the man they like by smiling at him, they're apt to do crazy things, so he'll look at them. If she thought she could get your attention by standing on her head, she'd have done that."

"Daddy, are you going to marry me?"

"What's the reason?" he asked. "Because you're indifferent," she said, promptly. "I think you just pretend to be a social wall. Do you know it?"

said, dryly. "You may be a free soul, but I'm old-fashioned. I don't mind your having a chorus here, but I've been seen around town with Nona, and she's got to stay at the hotel. And so have those dancing boys."

"Them?" Audrey's voice was filled with a fine contempt. "The boys can't do any harm! They're weak as dishwater."

Morton was firm. "I'm not going to have dishwater in my house. Not at this time—indeed not with eight or ten noisy chorus girls dashing around. We're likely to be raided as it is."

Audrey laughed delightedly. "Wouldn't that be great? I'd just LIKE to see it happen!"

"See what happen?" he inquired. "See us raided," she proclaimed. "Wouldn't that stir this old town up?"

"Humph," was his only comment. "It was with real pain that Parrish, at the office later in the morning, received Morton's instructions. He telegraphed in shorthand, a telegram to Abe Sunshine, and another to Nona, asking that the entire cast of the revue be sent to Rochester forthwith. Morton included an invitation to Sunshine himself."

"Add a line to Abe's message," said Morton, as an afterthought. "Say, 'Will continue rehearsals here.'"

Parrish moved his notebook away from him. "This is a terrible thing, Mr. Morton," he said.

"It's confounded nonsense," his employer agreed. "But Audrey has made up her mind to it."

Parrish tapped his pencil on the desk. "You indulge her too much, sir," he said, with emphasis. "Morton surveyed him quizzically. 'Have you ever tried combating the young lady's wishes?' he inquired. 'Several times,' he responded, 'but without much success.'"

Toward noon, Audrey called up to say that she had ordered several new dresses—"AWFULLY low-cut, the ones for evening," she added. "And the others are just too gay for words."

"Your idea is to shock the public of Rochester?" he inquired. "You said it!" she responded, as she hung up.

Morton was laughing as he set down the telephone, but gradually his face fell. He leaped into a brown study, his arms folded upon the table and his eyes fixed vacantly on the wall. Once, when Parrish entered, Morton waved him away with an impatient gesture.

Parrish laid a telegram on the table, and withdrew. Morton did not look at it.

With a heavy sigh, he turned at last to his desk, and opened a small drawer, that was concealed behind the upper curve of the desk. He drew from it the packet of papers that he had examined several times before in the last few weeks, and slowly unfolded the papers, and looked at them.

Laying the faded letters and photographs on the walnut table, one by one, he carefully picked two of the pictures, and several of the letters, and laid them to one side. His hands moved heavily as he restored the remainder of the package to its hiding place. The papers he had laid aside, he clipped together with a bit of wire, and left upon his desk.

Then he turned to the telephone, and called Audrey.

She responded, with excited chatter about the coming visit of the "Hims," responded Morton. "But what do you do next?"

"I've decided," she said. "I'm going to send for Nona and the girls, and those poor niggers of dancing men, and have them all come up here and visit me."

He laid down his spoon and stared. "The whole gang?"

"Absolutely," she said. "I want to show the people in this town that I'm emancipated. I don't care WHAT they think!"

"Well, I'll be damned," he commented. "After a moment's thought, he resumed. 'You can't have Nona and the boys at this house, though.'"

"Why not?" she demanded. "Because I'm not emancipated," he said, dryly.

"You may be a free soul, but I'm old-fashioned. I don't mind your having a chorus here, but I've been seen around town with Nona, and she's got to stay at the hotel. And so have those dancing boys."

DRESSED FOR LIFE!

Jaqueline Lemaine.

Paris. — This little girl is actually sitting pretty. She has an inheritance that every woman will envy. No matter what may happen, she will always be supplied with all the French frocks and finery that her heart may desire.

Her name is Jaqueline Lemaine, and she is a granddaughter of Monsieur Worth, the famous French couturier, who founded the house of Worth—back in the days when a real French frock was an event.

After his death, when his will was read, it was learned that he had made an unusual bequest to Jaqueline, his favorite grandchild. He stipulated that she was to be dressed, as extensively and elaborately as she desired, for the rest of her life at the expense of his firm.

So that's why the cost of living and the problem of dressing on a limited income need never trouble this particular little mademoiselle. She is photographed wearing a frock that was designed at Worth's for her to wear to a fancy dress party in Paris.

HER OWN WAY A GIRL OF TODAY

Miss Meredith took her package, paid her check, and left. "I'll say for a tenderfoot you are going some," said Angie Horton as she strolled beside me.

"What do you mean, going some?" "You don't mean to tell me you don't know who that girl is?" she asked.

"Yes, I know. She is Miss Joan Meredith."

"And doesn't that mean anything to you?" "Not a thing," I answered airily. "She is the boss' step-daughter."

"Good graces!" I exclaimed. "Yes, he married a woman much older than himself some years ago. She was an immensely rich widow with two children, Joan and John Meredith. They are twins. Mrs. Robinson, when she was Mrs. Meredith, had made for herself a solid social position. I'm sure that J. D. would never have married her if she hadn't had money and position."

But at that, I thought of Judy. "I'm not telling you what to do. I'm just putting the case before you. I'm just showing you that you've got to make your choice."

Health In Hot Weather

This is the first of a series of four articles on Health and Hot Weather Tomorrow: Drinks.

BY DR. HUGH S. CUMMING Surgeon General, United States Public Health Service

It will be readily understood that while the underlying principles of personal hygiene are always more or less the same, the actual measures to be observed vary somewhat in kind and degree with the seasons. Unless this fact is recognized and our conduct is accordingly unnecessary discomfort and even illness may result.

On very hot days physical and mental exertion should be greatly reduced. The food should be light, nutritious and easily digestible. The use of meats, fried foods and pastries and other sweets should be curtailed as they contribute materially to heat production.

On the other hand, fresh fruits, fruits, green vegetables, salads, cereals, milk and the bulky cooling foods satisfy the hunger while contributing but little to the production of heat.

In connection with the vacation, remember that this should be a time for rest and recuperation as well as for pleasurable relaxation. To make this period so strenuous that one returns to work tired out can scarcely be termed sensible or profitable.

Furthermore, full advantage should be taken of the opportunities for outdoor recreation offered by the change. To remain indoors constantly, to spend valuable time over the card table or to keep unnecessarily late hours, is to defeat the object of the vacation.

This And That In Feminine Lore

Ruth Elizabeth Tea Room, 75 North Main street. Noon luncheon 12 to 2. Afternoon tea, Demi-supper.

The cunningest rompers for a lot were developed in white linen, trimmed at neck and short sleeves with tiny ruffles of yellow linen. A row of three goose in yellow linen lowest one at about the knee, and the top one near the neck of the little garment.

Polka dots are not only having a tremendous vogue among the grownups but are shown on all types of cotton frocks for children. The plain fabric is trimmed with dotted bands or sometimes they occur as a design embroidered upon a solid color. Sometimes the dots are embroidered in multi-colors.

When the native berries become plentiful you will want to make some strawberry jam and for this the berries should be barely ripe so that they will jelly better. An expert gives this method for making jam for keeping the berries whole in a jelly-like mass: Wash, drain and hull, cooking for fifteen minutes without sugar to dry out the water. Measure and add to each cup of berries three-fourths of a cup of sugar, blend well and cook to 220 degrees, which is the jellying stage for fruit juices and jams. If anything it may be too stiff and skimming will have to be done with a teaspoon.

The big hat which is finding such a tremendous sale in millinery shops for summer wear may not be for you. If you are short and stout, don't buy one, or even if you are a tall stout. If you are old, no matter what your figure, then invest in one, but there is the trouble, how old does one have to be? I saw one today on a white haired woman and it was not only did not strike me as at all inappropriate. However, if you are young and tall and slim the big hat is the thing for you.

Although salads may be considered all the year round dishes, they are especially popular during the summer months when outdoor meals served either on the porch, the garden, or as picnic lunches are quite the vogue. As the days become warmer the preparation of hot meals is no longer a pleasure and therefore a salad is often chosen as the main dinner or supper dish. There is seemingly no limit to their variety although the combinations come under four heads, meat (including chicken), fish, vegetable and fruit. The meat salad gives the home-maker a splendid opportunity to use leftover meats of all kinds. An unusual salad is one combining ham, apples, celery and macaroni. It is a hearty salad and may be used as a main course at supper or luncheon.

An economical way to change a lettuce salad worth keeping in mind is to make chiffonade dressing, which is simply a French dressing with the addition of chopped radish, onion and sweet green pepper. Another popular dressing for vegetable salads is Russian dressing, made by adding Chili sauce to mayonnaise.

Suzanne Lenglen of tennis fame inaugurated the idea of the triple sweater, a heavy outer-pleated sweater worn over two of similar color but lighter texture, the idea being to remove the outer ones as the player becomes heated. An excellent idea for the unseasonably cold spring weather we have been having.

Paris has taken more interest this season than ever before. Stylists claim in the sport tub silks than which there is nothing better adapted to summer activities at country clubs.

A new idea in afternoon frocks is the "wing" panel, which forms under the arms and runs like a dart into the full wide skirt at the waist.

The WOMAN'S DAY

By Allene Sumner

The Ideal House: It should have a kitchen with a north or northwest exposure, dining room looking to the east, living room south and west, with two windows at least in each room.

This from the home demonstration department of a state college. The same savant states that rooms with warm exposures should be decorated in the cool background colors of blue, green, grey, or mauve, and north rooms should be warmed with colors of orange, yellow, tan or red. Light colors make a room seem larger and dark colors make it seem smaller. The floor should always be darker than the walls and draperies.

Beauty and Traffic: About four centuries ago there lived in France a woman so beautiful that dense crowds gathered before her house waiting for her to appear that they might bask in her beauty. The city fathers, perturbed by this blocking of the narrow streets, asked La Belle Paule to come for that a certain hour twice a week with face unveiled so that everyone might see her loveliness at those times and leave the streets unblocked at other hours.

Don't Crowd Today: A sad commentary on the beauty of today's woman is that crowds do not block streets to see any of them pass. Justine Johnson, recognized as one of our foremost beauties, even if not of the sort that crowds gather for to see gives a few pointers. "I use scented oil in my bath," writes she "It makes a film on the bath water which clings to the body, making it soft and smooth. Just before my shampoo every week, I rub olive oil into my scalp. I clean my face with a very greasy cold cream. I have discovered an eye lotion which may be used four or five times a day to freshen the eyes. I buy ten cent worth of camomile flowers and put them in boiling water and apply this lotion to my eyes whenever they are tired."

The Summer Baby: Every baby, say the infant savants, should have from 20 to 22 hours sleep a day its first month of life, and at least 16 hours until it is a year old. A clothes basket with blankets and cotton pad makes a good baby's bed.

Fish Omelet: Fish omelet varies the usual omelet, and is a thrifty way to use leftover fish in an appetizing manner. Free from bones and skin, any left-over fish and flake it fine. Beat the yolks of six eggs, adding a little salt and pepper and tablespoon of cream or canned milk. Beat egg whites well and fold in. Melt tablespoon of butter in usual way. When ready to fold add the fish, which should have been put into a little light cream sauce and heated.

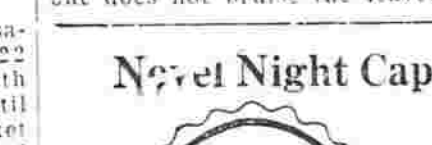

Table Service: The proper order for silverware upon the table laid for the formal dinner, is all knives and spoons at the right of the plate, all forks at the left. The only exception is the oyster fork which is laid to the right. Silver is laid in order of its use, starting from the outside and working in towards the edge. Thus, the oyster fork would precede the soup spoon if the oyster course were served. Dessert silver is not laid on the table, but is brought in when this course is served.

CHEAPER, TOO: If you add a cupful of cooked rice to your beef loaf, it will be moist, but will cut firmly and neatly.

QUICK REMEDY: An easy way to dry lettuce is to pat it between crumpled paper toweling. This absorbs the water but does not bruise the leaves.

Nevel Night Cap: A filmy night cap of silk mesh veiling especially designed to hold the waved bob in place

THE "JUMP FINISH"

(By CHARLEY PADDOCK.)
The most spectacular part of a sprint race is the finish. Incidentally, it is the most important.

Many great runners have lost their biggest matches right at the tape and many another unknown performer has won international recognition by an excellent driving finish that has brought victory over the favorite.

Arthur Duffey used what was known as the "lunge" finish, where both arms were thrown far behind and the chest was pushed into the string, far ahead of the legs.

The "lunge" is still accepted as one of the best methods of finishing. But Loren Murchison, Morris Kirksey, among the modern-day sprinters, as well as Jackson Scholz, use the style which Bernie Wefers made famous two decades ago. It is known as the "shrug" finish and consists of throwing one side of the body into the tape, with one arm up and with the same lean as is employed in the "lunge."

The "shrug" has the advantage over the "lunge" in that the side of the body hits the tape instead of the chest and is a gain of six inches, everything else being equal. And six inches is more than enough to win a close race.

Back in high school days I once saw a man give a great natural jump at the finish of a race and gain tremendously on his field. It was perfectly natural for that man to jump for the string. He had not planned to do it, but when he saw his chance of victory slipping from him, he threw himself into that tape. And it was helpful.

I tried it and found that it was natural for me. I increased the length of my last stride until it became literally a jump. It gave me also the chance to turn the side of my body into the string, thereby employing the best results of the "shrug" and I threw my hands up and back and my chest out, setting something of the "lunge" style also.

For myself I know that the "jump finish" is the most beneficial when performed correctly. Sometimes my step comes wrong and I do not use it and drive straight through with the "shrug," and sometimes I jump too high and lose by it. But when performed correctly, it will gain almost two feet in a close race.

WORTH IN SPORT KNOWING

George Kelly, McGraw's versatile player, has been in for world series—1921-22-23-24. And he has played three different positions, first, second and centerfield. While Kelly has always rated as a consistent .300 clubber, he has never reached the figure in the fall play-off. In 1924 he experienced his best series, hitting .290. He made nine hits in seven games and scored seven runs. The year before Kelly hit for an average of only .135, getting but four safe swats in 22 trips. In 1922 he failed to count a single marker, though batting .278. In his first series Kelly hit .233.

OLD RULE FAVORED RUTH IN 1921 HOME RUN MARK

Conservative Estimate Gives Babe Six Drives That Would Be Fouls Today

By BILLY EVANS.

When Babe Ruth set a new home run mark in 1921 with 59 circuit drives he was favored by a rule that has since been changed.

This is very interesting, since Ruth is more than keeping pace with his marvelous performance of five years ago.

As a matter of fact, Ruth is considerably ahead of his 1921 mark, despite the fact that the figures do not bear out such a statement. In the winter of 1920 the baseball rules committee made a change in the wording of the rule that related to home runs.

Instead of leaving the umpire judge the ball fair or foul according to where it was when it disappeared from his view, the rule stated that when the ball passed out of playing territory fair into the stands or over the fence it was a home run regardless of what later happened to its course.

In other words, the jurisdiction of the umpire ended when the ball passed out of playing territory while still in fair ground.

As I recall it, the rule remained in effect until early June, the National League, of the opinion that it was more difficult to interpret than the old rule, requested the American League to go back to the original wording, which called for the umpire to watch the ball until it finally disappeared from his view.

I umpired two ball games at the Polo Grounds in 1921 in which Ruth was credited with a home run under the changed rule that would now be merely classed as a foul ball.

One of these drives was hit into the left field bleachers and was perhaps 10 feet fair when it passed out of playing territory. That, of course, made it a home run, but I continued to watch the ball. The wind ultimately carried it foul and it was caught by a fan, high up in the bleachers, who was a yard on the foul side of the white line.

A similar drive into the right field stands went as a home run, but carried several yards foul after passing out of the playing field.

A canvas of the American League umpires on this question has caused me to set six home runs as the number Ruth profited by under the changed rule. That figure is conservative.

So in reality Ruth's batting rampage to date is considerably ahead of his 1921 mark when he made the 59 homers.

He is way ahead of his record performance when you erase the six home runs in question and the ball of 1925 is not nearly so lively; but also he hasn't the short fields of the Polo Grounds to aim at.

The baseball public is pulling for Babe to make 60 homers but believe me it is some task.

Latest figures show Ruth has hit several more four-baggers this season than he had batted out in a similar period in 1921.

Whether or not he can stick to the pace he's set thus far this season remains to be seen, of course.

High School Tennis Team Blanks West Hartford 6-0

Yesterday afternoon the local high school tennis team took West Hartford High school into camp to the tune of six to nothing. The locals did not allow their opponents a single set which is quite some feat as the matches were played on the West Hartford court.

The record of this year's tennis aggregation has been wonderful. Their record is one of the best the High school has had since that sport came into prominence. Eight games have been won, two have been draws, and one defeat. The one defeat of the year was received from St. Thomas Seminary but as the locals were forced to play without the services of Johnny Boyle and Egan Cole, who have been the mainstays of the team throughout the year, the manager will arrange another match to be played some time next week. A victory over St. Thomas and the local team's claim to the state tennis title for high schools will be excellent.

Next week Thursday the team will play Bristol High, which has a

For one thing, he's in better shape than he's known for the past few years, and for another his successful efforts during the first few weeks of the chase have restored the old-time confidence in him.

Off to a sensational start, the big fellow is quite apt to keep going, feeling that he at least stands a good chance of topping his record-smashing performance hung up in 1921.

True, that mark of 59 is quite a stretch ahead, but the campaign is young yet and Ruth has time to put it over, providing he can keep abreast of his present gait.

wonderful record for the year. This team has shut-out Torrington High and West Hartford and has beaten St. Thomas Seminary easily. It is the expectation of High school followers of the tennis team, however, that Manchester will win.

As the High school tennis courts are now in very excellent condition it is possible that The Norwich Free Academy tennis team which is considered one of the best in that section of the state may play here next Wednesday afternoon.

The following are the results of yesterday's match:

Singles.
Gotberg, Manchester, defeated Hollick, W. Hartford, 10-8 and 6-1.
Cole, Manchester, defeated Foster, W. Hartford, 6-2, 5-1.

INGRAHAMS OF BRISTOL OUT TO MAKE IT TWO OVER SONS

Visitors May Use McHugh; Sons Expect Two New Pitchers to Show Up.

Sons of Italy Kotsch, rf. Mantell, lf. Bullsieper, 1b. Dwyer, ss. St. John, cf. Edgar, 3b. Partons, 2b. Lamprecht, c. Buckland, p. Holland, p. Hewitt, p.

The team which broke the Sons' winning streak last Saturday will be seen in action this evening at the West Side diamond when the Ingraham Clock Company of Bristol comes here. The visitors' lineup will be practically the same as that of last week and the Sons expect a battle from start to finish.

One of the features of the game will be the first appearance of the venerable Punk Lamprecht behind the bat. Punk has been filling in at other positions during the season but it has been decided to alternate him with Waller as backstop. The other boy is playing with the New Departures and he feels that carrying the burden of both teams will not have the best effect on him. He will still catch for the Sons when he is not laying out of town. Advice from Bristol indicate that McHugh, the boy who held the locals to their two runs, will again face them on the mound. He is a portlander and his slants were too much for the Sons last week. If he doesn't work, there are Brooks and Stephens, the latter also filling in at second base.

"CHICK FEWSTER DOING WELL WITH BROOKLYN"

"Chick" Fewster, turned adrift by the Cleveland Indians last winter, is putting up nice brand of ball at second base for the Brooklyn Dodgers. Always a fairly consistent fielder, "Chick" has been getting his share of the hits, 100. Fewster, it will be recalled, was all but lost to the game when hit in the head by a pitched ball while playing with the Yankees several years ago.

The Sons are more anxious than usual to make this game a win for the Ingrahams started them off to a disastrous week end which lost them the two contests, and that after winning seven in a row. The Ingrahams bunched their hits in two innings and soon had a comfortable margin to work on. McHugh was invincible in that game and had the locals eating out of his hand.

It may be a different story together for the Sons have decided that two losses in two games are about enough. Whether or not they live up to their good intentions remains to be seen.

Mechanics Win 10th Straight; Pospisil Fans 13

GLASTONBURY HIGH UNABLE TO WEATHER LOCALS' ATTACK

Crumbles Before Super Twirling of Local Ace Getting But Three Hits; Coach Echemalian's Strategy Big Help

Ten straight wins! The local State Trade school baseball nine advanced one notch yesterday afternoon when it defeated Glastonbury High in a rather easy fashion in the City of Stones. The score was 8 to 3. The Mechanics now have but three more games in win in order to complete an undefeated season, a feat which hitherto has never been accomplished, to the best of our recollection, by any Manchester schoolboy nine.

The next game will be played a week from today at Colchester and the Bacon Academy which was defeated here 4-2 earlier in the season, will be the opponents.

Pospisil Brilliant

Yesterday's victory was again featured by the splendid pitching of Rudy Pospisil. This brilliant young athlete who has been twirling sensational ball for the Mechanics all season, allowed but three scattered hits, issuing but two free tickets. Pospisil also played a prominent part in the offense by whaling out a couple of singles and scoring three runs, as many as the whole Glastonbury team could score.

Echemalian Strategy

An incident that perhaps won the ball game and certainly one that should not be overlooked early in the game. This piece of strategy, as it later proved to be, put a stop in the scoring of the home team for the remainder of the game. It seems that Connelly started the game at shortstop but was having hard luck. He muffed a couple of easy grounders that resulted in the Glastonbury team scoring three runs and knocking out the score. Without waiting to see whether Connelly might redeem himself, Echemalian sent in a substitute. It was no discredit to Connelly and he will probably be back in his regular berth next week, but it certainly showed the determination of the coach to leave no stone unturned in his effort to have the Mechanics complete an undefeated season.

Here is how the Manchester nine were scored:

First Inning: Manchuck was hit by a pitched ball Zimmerman singled. Pospisil was also hit. Thurz singled, scoring Manchuck and Zimmerman.

Sixth Inning: Schlebenpluz walked. Koplinski singled and Zimmerman and Pospisil duplicated. This coupled with an error save Manchester four more runs.

Ninth Inning: Pospisil singled and completed the fruit on errors and Thurz's single.

DIAMOND DISPUTES DECIDED.

On fly ball that is caught, baserunner originally on first who had run almost to third, believing the ball would drop safe, failed to touch second on his way back. How can he be retired?

When forced to return to a base to escape being doubled up, as on the caught fly ball, the runner, must touch the intervening bases or bases in the reverse order.

Failure to do so makes said runner liable to be put out if the team in the field notices the slip.

Said runner can be retired by holding the ball on the base he failed to touch or by touching him with the ball.

Charles Darwin was partly an invalid, due mainly to an eye defect which caused extreme dizziness.

RAYMOND STARR.

His name is Starr and he shines brightly, does this 18-year-old pitcher of the Danville team, Three-Eye League. He stepped into the hall of fame the other day by hurling a no-hit, no-run game against the heavy-hitting Bloomington nine. He didn't issue a single pass, either, and throughout the fray had the enemy popping up flies and rolling easy grounders.

The sensational Braves ran their winning streak to seven straight by polishing off the Cubs, six to three. A four-run rally in the first inning provided a winning margin for Joe Genevich, who stood for little or no nonsense from the Cubs.

Cleveland took another game from Washington, 11 to 5. Jamie-son and Burns got four hits apiece for a perfect day at bat.

The Browns cut another slice of Boston pie, drubbing the Red Sox, six to four, for their tenth victory in 14 games at home.

PICKS BERLENBACH TO WIN THE MATCH

Sport Expert Thinks Stribling is Trained Too Fine for Tonight's Fight.

BY DAVIS J. WALSH

New York, June 10.—According to zoological data, the elephant is the only jungle animal the tiger won't attack just for the sheer sake of starting something, and perhaps it would be a good plan for W. L. ("Young") Stribling, Georgia challenger, to remember that tonight.

Stribling, in action, is pretty much of a rippin', tearing tiger, but he will meet ponderous Paul Berlenbach in a 15 round bout for the world's light heavyweight championship and that's distinctly different. One rips and tears an elephant's hide like the skin of a cannonball and when he steps on one, the party most concerned may consider himself thoroughly stepped on. The writer thinks Berlenbach will win.

Earlier Predictions

Three weeks ago I might have liked Stribling for this bout, for the night he stepped out with Johnny Risko, he was every inch a real champion. But the boy, down to 173 pounds yesterday, seems to be trained too fine which means that probably he has left the last seven rounds of his fight in the gymnasium.

It also would mean that some of his natural speed will not be with him and its an excellent bet that he'll need all of it to keep out of 15 rounds, and I believe some doubt in the writer's mind that Stribling will be able to do that, even if he enters the ring trained to a fault.

Has the Punch

Berlenbach may be as graceless as a sacred ox but he has the punch and it would seem that Stribling hasn't. In his stolid, purposeful way, Berlenbach will land that punch many times before the end of 15 rounds, and I believe that after the tenth, he will have Stribling down to his own speed.

Popular rumor has Berlenbach with a weak chin and Stribling with a weak midriff, but I discount both. As far as is known, Stribling hasn't been hurt in all the fights he has had while Paul has been hit on the potato many times and oft but, with one exception, has contrived to live the situation down. That punch, a right hander, by Jack Delaney, was good enough to goal Dompney; yet Berlenbach was on his feet at nine. He had the will to get up but lacked the strength to stay there.

The wise money held Stribling a favorite for the past ten days but indications are that even money will prevail today, with the possibility that the champion will get the call in the last minute rush.

Diamond Disputes Decided

What is considered as trapping a fly ball and what is the purpose of the play?

The thought in trapping a fly ball is to confuse any runners who might be on the bases at the time and thereby make possible a chance for a double or triple play, when by catching the fly ball only one man could be retired.

A smart infielder always has a good chance to pull the play successfully, when the batsman, in disgust over popping up a fly ball, fails to run it out.

In the American League a player can only trap a ball in one way; that is by first letting it strike the ground and then getting it on the rebound.

When a player gets a fly ball in his hands and then purposely opens them up and allows the ball to fall to the ground, American League umpires rule the ball has been held momentarily and the batsman is out. This is a safer way to try to profit than by trapping the ball but should not be allowed.

However, it is permissible in certain leagues and can be worked to the same advantage as the actual trapping of the ball.

The Giants clinched their hold on sixth place by folding up under the shots of Wee Willie Sherdel of the Cardinals. Al Tyson, New York outfielder, returned to the game and got a homer, but his mates couldn't hit in the pinches and lost, four to two.

Coming from behind late in the game, the Yankees nosed out the Tigers, four to three, and increased their lead over Philadelphia to eight and one-half games. Huggins used two young pitchers, McQuaid and Braxton, and got away with it.

Rockville went down to a crushing defeat at the hands of its ancient rival Manchester last evening at the West Side grounds when Cheney Brothers romped to an overwhelming victory over the J. J. Regan Company. The score was 11 to 1. Manchester scored in every inning except the fifth. It was the second straight victory Cheney Brothers have chalked up by a large score.

Young Pop Edgar was on the hill for the home club and he toyed with the visitors almost from the start. He was touched up for nine hits but always was the master of the situation in the pinches. He fanned four batters, made two hits and scored two runs.

"Ike" Cole paled out a double and a triple to aid the local cause. Pitt and Stratton also whaled Webber for a couple of lts. Stratton had a perfect batting average and scored three runs.

Rockville scored a run in the first but that was the end for them. Manchester scored two runs in each of the first three innings. Partons, Stratton and Brennan walked filling the bases in the opening frame and then Edgar scored Partons with a fly to left field. Pitt scored Stratton with a double.

In the second Cole tripled, and scored on Parton's single. The latter stole second and scored on Stratton's one-base blow.

In the third Edgar singled, took second on Pitt's sacrifice and scored on Dowd's single. The latter crossed the pan on Cole's double.

In the fourth, Stratton's double and Brennan's single gave the locals another tally.

In the sixth frame Cheney Brothers ended the scoring with four more runs. Partons, Stratton and Hanna walked in succession and singles by Edgar and Pitt coupled with an error by R. Burke, accounted for the tallies. The summary:

When tobaccos are good enough to speak for themselves

—let them say it!

THAT'S the one way to give men what they want in a cigarette—natural tobacco taste. Each type of tobacco should contribute — one its spicy tang, one its rich aroma, one its mellow "body," one its mild sweetness; and if the quality is right and the blend is right, that's all there is to it.

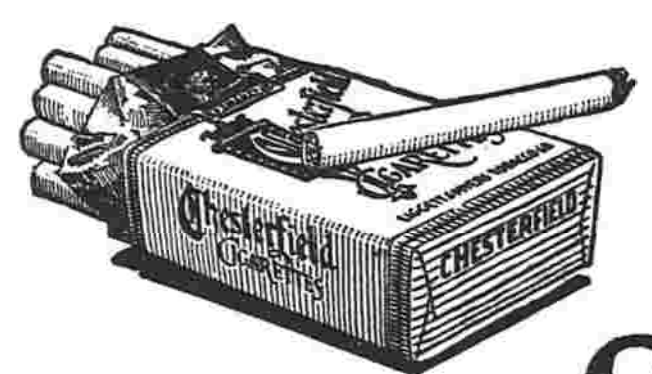

Sounds easy!

But to create a blend that combines fullness with mildness; that removes heaviness while retaining

"character"; that makes a cigarette that is smooth and mild yet "satisfying"—to do all this is not easy, far from it.

It is so difficult, in fact, that millions of smokers sincerely believe it has been achieved in only one blend in the world.

This blend—and they swear by it—belongs to Chesterfield. It embodies the finest of Turkish and American tobaccos — and it can't be copied.

In the Kitchen with 6 Famous Cooks

SIX TRADITIONAL NEW ENGLAND DISHES

(Ed. Note: This is one of a special series of articles contributed by 6 Famous Cooks. Their recipes are "different." Cut them out and paste them in your cook book.)

Probably no section of the country is as famous for its traditional dishes as New England. The eating of beans and brown bread has become almost a rite in many of those old homes.

Miss Lucy G. Allen, head of the well-known Boston School of Cookery, has spent all her life in New England. She has taught hundreds of women cooking in her classes, and has written many cook books, among them "Choice Dishes for Clever Cooks," and "Table Service."

She has contributed to this unusual cooking series recipes for six typically New England dishes.

Boston Baked Beans

It's the preparation and the slow cooking which makes Boston Baked Beans superior to all others.

Pick over one quart of pea or kidney beans, cover with cold water and soak over night. In the morning, drain, cover with fresh water and simmer until the skins begin to break. Drain again. Wash and score a three-inch cube of fat, earthenware beanpot. Bury the pork in the beans, leaving the rind exposed. Mix one tablespoon of salt, one tablespoon of molasses, three tablespoons of sugar, add these seasonings to one cup of boiling water and pour over the beans. Then add enough boiling water to cover the beans. Cover the beanpot, put in hot oven and bake six or eight hours, uncovering the last hour of cooking.

Steamed Brown Bread

For a most delectable meal, serve steaming hot brown bread with the beans. It's a prime combination. Many folks like to eat catsup with the beans. Here's the original New-England Brown Bread.

Mix two cups cornmeal, one cup of rye meal, two teaspoons of soda, two teaspoons of salt, one-half cup of molasses and about three and one-half cups of milk. Let stand for half hour, stirring occasionally. The bread is better if the meal swells before the mixture is put into the tin. Butter baking-powder tin. Fill a little over one-half full, cover and steam several hours.

And Chowder

A hearty dish, liked especially by men, is fish chowder. It is economical, too. Buy a four pound haddock, skinned with the head left on. Remove the fish from the backbone and cut into two inch pieces and set aside. Put the backbone broken in pieces and the head into a steapan, add two cups of cold water, bring slowly to the boiling point and cook twenty minutes. Put into the chowder kettle and melt and a half cube of fat salt pork cut into small bits, and fry out.

Add one sliced onion and fry for five minutes. Add three or four medium sized potatoes cut in thin slices. Strain the stock from the fish bones over the potatoes and cook until they are soft. Add the fish and simmer ten minutes, then add one quart of milk, one tablespoon of salt, one-eighth teaspoon of pepper, three tablespoons of butter and either three or four pieces of salt bread or six or seven cooking crackers. The longer a chowder can simmer or stand before serving the better it will be.

You'll approve it, too

You'll be enthusiastic about New Perfection's instant, odorless heat. For slow cooking, for fast cooking; for baking, for frying, and for broiling the New Perfection will win your approval.

Full line of wicks and repair parts always in stock.

WATKINS BROTHERS

HE WENT TO NORTH POLE, BUT DIDN'T TELL WIFE

And Mrs. Richard Byrd Worried More Over Husband's Frozen Nose Than Success.

—ANOTHER AMERICAN LOVE STORY—

Lieut.-Com. Richard E. Byrd and Mrs. Byrd.

Boston—When Lieut.-Com. Richard E. Byrd took off for one of his spectacular flights all the world knows it before his wife does.

A veil of mystery hangs between his drearily venturing into storm and fog, and the home life of the little family group in Massachusetts, behind its shelter his slim, brown-eyed wife tends his health and mothers his children and fights her own battles against anxiety.

"All I ask is not to know," says Marie Ames Byrd. "If I didn't have the protection of insurance, I couldn't go on. Knowing the exact moment at which he hops off for a flight from which he may never return would mean a scene of suspense until word of his landing came."

and losing buttons and forgetting to pack his suitcase. And it is Marie Byrd's life work to supply the care he needs in order to continue his career in the clouds.

As she sits, surrounded by her three children, Richard, Evelyn and Katherine, quietly talking of her husband, the emotion which she suppresses in voice and manner may be plainly read in the somber eyes. This being the wife of a flyer-hero is not a path of roses, for all the glory that surrounds it!

Not only must Mrs. Byrd wrestle some kind of peace for herself from the uncertainties of her life, but she must also be a bright and cheerful mother to her children, who are too young to understand just what this wonderful thing is that their daddy has done.

"That is a large part of my duty, keeping the children happy," she says. "I try to appear calm for their sakes, no matter how I feel."

When the papers stated that Commander Byrd had hopped off for the pole, she took her little brood away to the country, to make sure that no incautious person would tell them of his dangerous enterprise.

Her married life has been one long warfare against worry. When Dick Byrd met and wooed her, she was one of the leading debutantes of Winchester, Va., not far from Annapolis, where Byrd was an ensign in the naval academy.

His "Portable" Home. They were married Jan. 20, 1915, at Christ's Church, Winchester. The groom's best man, his brother, is now governor of Virginia.

"I supposed that my husband would encounter no more danger than the ordinary naval officer," she says. "But I soon discovered that his life—that is, his real life ambition and achievement—was to be lived in the air."

"He had already planned a flying career. And soon after, he flew north with the Trans-Atlantic flyers, and I stayed in Washington, tasting the first bitterness of suspense."

When Byrd was with the around-the-world fliers, his wife and children followed his course from station to station on a little map in their living room.

She was ready to rush to him at any time, as she rushed when he was thrown into icy waters from an open boat off the Newfoundland coast and contracted pneumonia.

"I have a sort of portable home," wherever Dick is, on short notice.

"His magnificent, you know—all the gallantry and dash and courage that the public has invested in him with is real. But it is agony whenever I know he is in the air. Though I know he's a thoroughly capable aviator, I simply can't get used to the risk of ordinary flight, much less that over Arctic wastes."

"He'll never give up flying. It's a passion with him. And I'll never ask him to give it up. I haven't the right."

She was asked whether it was true that Commander Byrd planned a trip to the South Pole. "I don't know," she replied, and then sat silent and sad for a moment.

"Oh, but I hope it isn't true."

REMOVES STAIN.

Equal parts of egg and glycerine applied to grass stains will remove them.

WRING BY HAND.

When laundering table linen never put it through the wringer as that makes creases that are almost impossible to remove.

STAINS ON HOSIERY.

The steat, shoes sometimes leave on the feet of light colored stockings may be removed by washing them in water to which a tablespoon of borax has been added.

Salad for Thirty

Forty-seven pounds was the weight of the old gent from Maine pictured above. He supplied enough meat for lobster salad for 30 persons. His arms were just about as long as that of the young lady shown tickling his ribs with a fork.

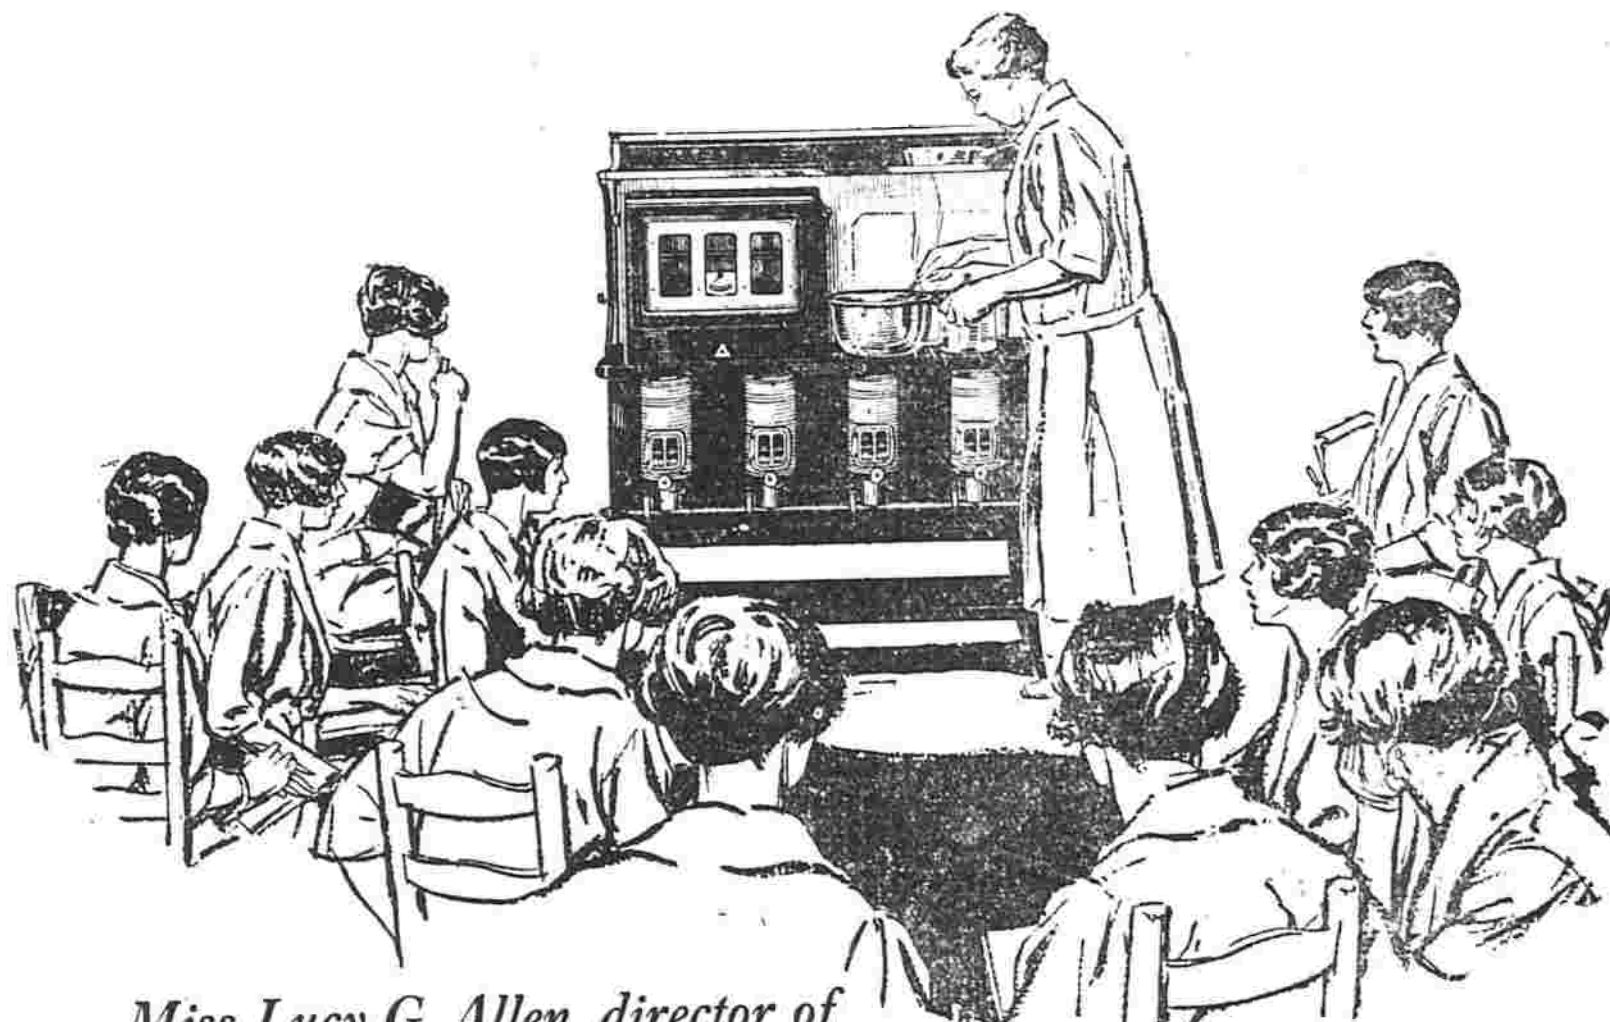

VERY PRACTICAL.

Navy blue is increasingly popular as the season advances. In georgette crepe and in foulard it is seen in the largest quantities.

MORE EFFICIENT.

A cheap whiskbroom is an excellent medium for sprinkling clothes, and it keeps the hands absolutely dry.

BOSTON SCHOOL of COOKERY Tests and Approves

Miss Lucy G. Allen, director of the school, tells her experience with the Perfection Oil Stove.

MISS LUCY ALLEN, director of the conservative Boston School of Cookery, is one of six famous cooks who recently put the Perfection Stove to a rigorous, practical cooking test. Like the other five famous cooks, Miss Allen cooked by every cooking process, and gave us her opinion of the Perfection.

Uniformly Good Results

"I cooked many meals on the Perfection Stove," says Miss Allen. "The results, whether using the top of the stove, the oven, the broiler, or the toaster were uniformly good. There were several features sufficiently pronounced to recommend the stove to the most particular people."

Easy to Work on

"The Perfection is an easy stove to work on. There is no reaching across several hot plates, as there is with a gas or coal range. "The flame never varied from the point at which it was set, whether it was low for stewing down pumpkin or high for baking beans several hours."

Clean Kettles

"There was no black deposit on the cooking utensils, even when the high, yellow tipped flame was used for broiling steak."

"The long chimneys burn every drop of oil completely before the heat reaches the utensils."

"We were so well pleased with the 1926 Perfection Stove, both as to results and operation, that after completing the test we kept it to use for auxiliary work in our classes," she concluded.

Tested and approved by the Boston School of Cookery: That means that the Perfection was used under all possible cooking conditions—for slow cooking, for fast cooking; for baking, for frying, and for broiling. In every case it was found efficient.

Six Cooks Agree

The other five famous cooks who tested the Perfection were enthusiastic, too, about the results obtained. And, every day 4,500,000 women get real cooking satisfaction from their Perfections.

See these 1926 Perfections at any dealer's. All sizes from a one-burner stove at $6.75 to a five-burner range at $20.50. When you cook on a 1926 Perfection, you, too, will be well pleased with it.

ADVENTURES of the TWINS

by OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

"Nancy, Nancy! Quick—wake up," cried Nick. "Flops and Inco have run off."

"What?" cried Nancy, sitting up in bed and rubbing her eyes. "What's wrong?"

"I just saw Inco, our china elephant doorstop with the roses painted all over him, and Flops, my circus clown, jump out of the window. It's as light as day outside with the moon and I saw everything. They've gone."

"I suppose," said a tiny person, who appeared suddenly on a moonbeam, "that they have gone to Drowsy Land."

"Drowsy Land?" cried both twins together. "Where is it and how do you get there?"

"On a moonbeam," said the Fairy Queen, for that is who it was, this tiny creature sitting there in the air so comfortably on nothing at all but a stream of light. "You get there on a moonbeam, for Drowsy Land is on the moon."

"Why do you think Inco and Flops went there?" asked Nick.

"Well, it's a secret," said the Fairy Queen. "But I don't mind telling you as you are sure to find out anyhow. Inco got tired of being called 'queer' because he was sprigged all over like wallpaper. So he decided to go to a place where nothing is queer. Nothing is queer in Drowsy Land. It is the queerest place on earth. I mean 'on the moon.'"

"Oh dear! I guess we weren't very kind to the poor darling," said Nancy. "I never noticed him at all lately. I don't think he had any feelings and here he had all the time."

"He mentioned it," said the Fairy Queen. "He said it was trying to be neither a toy nor a real animal—that no one cared for a door-stop!"

"Why, I just loved him so I did!" wailed Nancy. "But I never knew it until now. I'm so sorry, so I am."

"So am I," said Nick, hugging his knees and looking at the empty place in the floor where Inco had stood.

"That's the way," sighed the Fairy Queen. "We never know how much we love people or things until they're gone. How about Flops?"

"I liked Flops better than any of my toys," said Nick. "I do wish he hadn't gone."

"I suppose he felt sorry for Inco," said the Fairy Queen. "He has a kind heart. Flops has, and no doubt he didn't want the elephant to run off by himself. But now I shall tell you why I am here, children. I decided to let you go after the runaways. If you wish, if Inco finds out how much you really and truly care for him, he will come back. I know."

Suddenly a wallpaper bunny spoke up. "If he'll come back and stand by the door as he used to, I'll be more friendly, too. I'll wiggle my ears at him six times a day."

"And I'll wiggle my tail," said a wallpaper duck.

"And I'll blink my eyes at him in my friendliest fashion," said a wallpaper squirrel.

"And I'll sing him a song," said a painted bird on the bureau.

"And I'll flutter my wings," said a butterfly.

"Very well," said the Fairy Queen, sliding two pairs of magic shoes down the moonbeam so that they landed on the floor between the two little beds. "Get up and dress yourselves quickly, children, and put on these shoes. If you wish to go to Drowsy Land it must be done before moon-down."

SENSE AND NONSENSE

The dreamer lives forever, the worker dies in a day.

"Say, Diogenes, why the lantern?"

"I never trust these Greek women in the dark."

A credit manager says some people seem to get their fashions for paying their debts from Paris.

The best way to cure men from believing in dreams is to make them marry one of them.

Kit and Kin.

"Very interesting conversation there," asked father, thrusting his head through the parlor door, where Ethel, Tom, and little sister Mary sat very quietly.

"Yes," said Ethel. "Tom and I were discussing kit and kin; weren't we, Mary?"

"Yes, they were," replied Mary. "Mr. Tom thaid 'May I have a kit?' and Ethel thaid 'You kin.'"

The amusement tax seems especially unfair when the show doesn't amuse.

To An Absent Wife.

I've drunk your health so often, These weeks I've been alone, I've drunk your health so often, That I have wrecked my own!

When a fellow is "all to the mustard" he must feel pretty smart.

"Gee, I thought that was hay min in that bottle. Come to find out it was muclilage. No wonder I couldn't get my hat off."

You Don't Know.

Why is it that every event takes on a sentimental aspect as soon as it becomes a memory?

A man who lived in Alabama went hunting and got careless with the gun, so now he doesn't live anywhere.

Beauty parlors and barber shops are advertising to bob hair to match the face. That probably accounts for all those dumb-looking haircuts we see.

Every Roof is Shingled.

Shingle belles, shingle belles, Shingle all the way; All the barber shops are busy. It's the finest fad today. Shingle belles, shingle belles. Right close to your dome; Oh what fun it is to know There's that much less to comb.

She was the taxidermist's daughter, and boy, she knew her stuff.

Can You Swallow This?

We've just found the man who threw his drowning friend a lime mint for a life-saver.

It has gotten so girls take off their clothes to go to a party and put them on to go to bed.

"It was the old, old story," sighed the pretty wife on the witness stand in the divorce court. "A horse and a jackass can never agree."

"Don't you call me a horse," roared the husband, as he shook off his attorney's restraining hand.

A man dizzing ditches the other shoes down a pie. This is what we call the original dirty dig.

When a man says he just got back from Florida you at once wonder how.

It's nice to lay something away for a rainy day, unless it's an umbrella that belongs to somebody else.

When a collector calls, a lot of people let him think they're out—maybe because they know if they're in, they'll be out anyway.

The life guard usually charged one dollar for saving a life. One day a Scotchman was rescued about half dead. Guess how much he paid.

A mule wouldn't get so doggone baky and highfalutin' if it would stop to remember that its father was a jackass.

There was a bully in our town, and he was wondrous wise. The only guys he picked upon were just 'bout half his size.

There is no necessity of a married woman buying a book of fairy tales. She gets them first hand.

Some women find fault if their husbands don't speak to them, and at the same time, complain if they are interrupted.

PREDICTS GOOD YEAR FOR TOBACCO MEN

John Spillane Gives His Reasons for This—Big Increase in Sale of Cigars.

Basing his deductions on a study of conditions here and in Florida, John Spillane, for many years manager of the Hartman plantation at Buckland, said today he predicts this year's to be the best tobacco year out of the last three.

"My reasons for making this prediction are as follows: "In the first place over two million dollars' worth of tobacco was destroyed by fire this winter. Next the acreage in this vicinity has been cut down 30 per cent, at least. Next, only one case of tobacco is packed from an acre this year when formerly one could figure on four cases per acre. So much for the supply. Now for the demand. "For years I have been watching the cigar market in Tampa, Florida. In this city alone, 12,000 cigar makers are employed all the year round and almost all of our shade grown tobacco finds its way to Florida. The best cigar manufactured in this great cigar city is described as a Connecticut shade grown wrapper, a Wisconsin binder and Havana filler. "Now in the Tampa market all through the winter I watched the cigar market closely and I have discovered that each month there is recorded a big increase. That

The June meeting of the club is the last meeting before fall so it has become a custom to hold the meeting out of town each year. Following the supper the club members adjourned to the Town hall where the business meeting was held and cards and dancing enjoyed for the balance of the evening. Music for the dancing was provided by the High School orchestra with Mose Lindell prompting for the old fashioned dances.
