TREASURY BALANCE.

Washington, Aug. 23.—Treasury balance August 20: $170,532,617.80.

Here is Rudolph Valentino's own story of his life. The famous film star wrote it for NEA Service and The Herald shortly before he became seriously ill in New York. It is presented here as an absorbing, straight-forward story, just as Valentino wrote it. His career was one of the most unusual in screen history.

BY RUDOLPH VALENTINO

(Copyright, 1926, NEA Service Inc.) In my early studio days I once tried to sell the story of my life as a scenario. It was rejected as being "too wild and improbable." To have one's life thus characterized by a company which specializes in the most frantic serials was rather disconcerting.

As I try to view my own historical record with detachment I can see clearly what the scenario editor meant. The hero of my tale is not at all consistent. Like a movie hero. In fact, I am not sure that he is the hero. At times he has all the appearance of "the villain."

Yet again, he seems to have good impulses, which a movie villain never has. Nor does my life run true to dramatic form. It should mount in a straight line to a climax instead of that it bounds, like a kangaroo.

A Real Name I was born in the little village of Castellaneta, Italy, May 6, 1895, and was shortly thereafter christened Rodolph Alfonso Raffaello Pierre Filibert Guglielmi di Valentina d'Antonguolla.

Following this accomplishment I again slipped from grace. I went off to Paris with Moritz Carlo to see the world. After all my money was gone I returned home a prodigal son.

My family decided that I was apt to disgrace them and that it were better that I be shipped far, far away.

RUDOLPH VALENTINO DEAD; PLEURISY RELAPSE FATAL

GREEKS DEPOSE PANGALOS AND IMPRISON HIM

Athens "Mussolini" Quick Victim of a Bloodless Revolt—Tried to Get Away on Destroyer.

Athens, Greece, Aug. 23.—General Pangalos, deposed Grecian dictator, known as the "Greek Mussolini," was brought back to Athens today a prisoner. General Pangalos was disembarked from the destroyer Leon and confined in a military prison, where he will be interned until the new regime of General Kondylis decides his fate.

The Pangalos regime was overthrown in a quick and bloodless revolution headed by Kondylis, former minister of war. Pangalos was arrested yesterday and placed aboard a destroyer to be brought to Athens from Spetsae. The commander of the destroyer, however, was a Pangalos supporter and tried to effect an escape.

Boats Exchange Shots. Upon the arrival of the Leon it was learned that General Pangalos was captured on board the destroyer Pergamos, off Cape Matapan, only after an exchange of rifle shots, although no one was injured.

Threatened, Didn't Fight. As the Leon drew alongside the Pergamos, on which the former dictator was fleeing, a board-party was ordered on the Pergamos. As the boarders prepared to board the Pergamos they were threatened by the officers and men of that destroyer armed with hand-grenades. When the boarding party opened fire with their rifles, however, there was no resistance.

Captain Kollaxakis, commander of the board party detachment and one of the chief supporters of General Pangalos, has resigned his commission.

A bloodless affair, a battle with the Athens garrison was averted when the commandant, declined at first to recognize the revolutionists. He finally surrendered unconditionally, however, to General Kondylis who personally headed a battalion of the revolting troops.

Full Control. The Kommandos and its supporters this morning had control of all public buildings and were conducting all government affairs. All political prisoners who had been arrested and imprisoned on orders of General Pangalos have been liberated.

The population was generally going about its business as usual today. No disturbances had been reported, although there were a number of popular mass-meetings held at which enthusiasm was expressed over the overthrow of the Pangalos regime and support was pledged for General Kondylis.

Idol of Film Lovers Fails to Rally from Complication; Awakes from Morphine Sleep Desperately Ill and Five Doctors Consult; Short, Romantic Career.

New York, Aug. 23.—Rudolph Valentino, idol of millions of motion picture fans, died at 12:10 o'clock this afternoon.

The crisis was at hand this morning. Valentino's temperature rose to 104 1-2, the highest it has been since he underwent an operation for acute appendicitis and gastric ulcers a week ago Sunday.

Although Valentino clung courageously to life, the five physicians in attendance were admittedly gravely concerned. They would not forecast what might happen within the next hour. It was impossible to subdue the attack of pleurisy that came after he had been declared out of danger.

At seven o'clock, word came from the sick room that the patient was showing no improvement. Ullman at Bedside.

That the crisis had been reached was indicated by the fact that George Ullman, Valentino's manager, refused to leave the bedside to furnish newspapermen with the latest bulletins.

Some significance also was placed in the arrival of a priest, who, after being refused admittance to the sick room, telephoned for two other priests. The priest refused to say whether the rites were to be administered. He said he was a boyhood friend of Valentino and that this is a "matter of life and death."

When the priest, who refused to give his name, asked Ullman if he might see Valentino, Ullman refused.

"Is he dying?" the priest asked. "I'm afraid so," Ullman replied. "Sleep Under Morphine."

Early in the day hope was held for Valentino's recovery because he had slept during the night. Later, however, it was announced that the sleep had been induced by morphine.

When Valentino awakened shortly before nine o'clock, the five attending physicians were summoned for a consultation.

Up to 11 o'clock no official bulletin was given out by the doctors concerning the patient's condition. Valentino was unconscious when death came. He had received the last rites of the Catholic church yesterday morning. He was anointed with sacred oil, and partook of the holy communion.

As he died, priest held a crucifix to the doctor's lips.

At the bedside of the actor when he died were Ullman, Joseph Schenck, of the United Artists' corporation; Father Edward Leonard, Catholic priest; Father Congedo, and Valentino's three physicians.

Right up to the very end Valentino believed he would live. At a time when the doctors had given up all hope, he remarked to those at the bedside:

"Don't pull the curtains down. I'm feeling fine and I want the sunlight to greet me."

1,000 Calls an Hour. As news of the seriousness of Valentino's condition spread, great crowds gathered around the hospital.

Telephone calls at the rate of 1,000 an hour were being received at the hospital from persons eager to learn the screen star's condition.

Valentino's condition took the first bad turn for the worse Saturday. This was after he had successfully thrown off peritonitis. Sunday his condition again became alarming when he developed pleurisy in his left chest. His relapse was so steady from that time that his life was despaired of for hours. Then he slept, but passed a poor night.

Whole System Poisoned. Dr. Harold Meeker, of the Polytechnic hospital, today described the causes of Valentino's death. He had attended the star throughout his illness since the operation for appendicitis last week.

"Mr. Valentino was overwhelmed with sepsis," the doctor said, "which means that he died of poisoning, suffering from septic endocarditis, or a poisoning of the cardiac nerves of the heart. The actor's stomach was full of holes the diameter of a man's finger. Food passed through these holes into the abdominal cavity and resulted in the poisoning. Mr. Valentino had been suffering from a chronic upset stomach. He had not taken good care of himself."

she made her start, Miss Barrett was a mile off shore. She was swimming with great vigor and more than her usual speed, and it was said that she was shooting at the record created by Gertrude Ederle in her swim across the channel.

Takes Hardest Way. By starting from the Dover side, Miss Barrett has selected the hardest way across, for the experts claim that the tides and drift from the English side and landing in France is harder than making a landing in England.

self, and during the past few weeks had sought relief through the excessive use of bi-carbonate of soda, which merely aggravated his condition.

"During the last few days the patient lived on peptonized milk."

Talked of Fishing Trip. Dr. Meeker said that Valentino's last really conscious moment was about 3:30 this morning, when he was talking rationally.

"He was looking forward," the doctor said, "to a trout fishing trip which we had planned to take together after his recovery. About 4 o'clock his mind started to wander, and he talked rapidly in Italian which I cannot understand, so his last words were not known to me."

"From then until about eight o'clock he talked intermittently, but unintelligently. At eight he dropped into a deep coma. At nine he opened his eyes, and we kept calling to him, but there was no response, and he apparently did not recognize us."

Death Pained. "Mr. Valentino died painlessly, and very quickly," Dr. Meeker said that rumors of a last-minute effort to save Valentino's life through blood transfusion were false.

Regarding plans for the funeral, he stated that the actor's brother in Italy, had been impossible for Miss Negri to leave for New York immediately as her current picture, "Hotel Imperial," is not yet completed.

"We can't hold up the picture now," it was explained, "we have already set a release date."

Miss Negri was too broken to make comment.

No Realization. At no time did Valentino believe he was going to die. He was constantly remarking to the attending nurses that he would soon be up and well and that he would take the vacation he had planned in the Maine woods. When the end came he was unconscious and there was a semblance of a smile upon his lips.

The death of the world-famous screen star was hastened when he developed septic endocarditis, an inflammation of the lining membrane of the heart.

BIG BREAK IN COAL STRIKERS' RANKS

British Miners Flock Back to Work, Accepting Local Agreements. London, Aug. 23.—Thousands of British miners returned to work today, although the coal strike continues in effect officially.

Miners are accepting local agreements, without regard to the efforts of their leaders to effect a national agreement. It is estimated that 35,000 will be working by Saturday, as many continue to sign on under local agreements.

The return is most effective in the midland pits. Week-end efforts of A. J. Cook and other leaders of the miners' federation to check the return to work have apparently not been successful.

It is reported that the Miners' Federation may seek new negotiations for the settlement of the strike tomorrow, although the operators are disinclined to open negotiations while the present efforts toward local agreements are succeeding.

DIAZ NOT SANGUINE OF OPEN CHURCHES

Mexican Bishop Qualifies Optimism — Not Mentioned in Calles Parley. Mexico City, Aug. 23.—The Mexican press today almost unanimously predicts that religious services in the Roman Catholic churches will be resumed, and that the religious struggle between the Episcopate and the government will be terminated as a result of a conference between President Calles and the two prelates, Archbishop Ruiz and Bishop Diaz on Saturday night.

Bishop Diaz, acting as spokesman for the prelates, said the optimism of the newspapers was only partly justified, in view of what transpired at the conference. He said that President Calles spoke with the utmost frankness himself, and invited the prelates to do likewise.

Better Understanding. As a result of this frank exchange of views, Bishop Diaz said, each side to the controversy had gained a better understanding of the other party's position.

The discussion lasted for more than an hour, during which all phases of the dispute were examined. The president and the prelates agreed that the Episcopate should present at least one, and possibly more, legislative projects to the federal congress when it convenes for its regular session; also that the Episcopate should have free access to the courts for a ruling on the constitutionality of the government's religious regulations.

President Calles did not ask for, and the prelates did not offer, a renewal of religious services in the churches in the immediate future.

No Papal Approval. Rome, Aug. 23.—The Vatican has received, by special courier, a lengthy report from the Mexican Episcopate relative to the religious controversy there, but as yet has received no suggestion for the approval of a renewal of the cult, it was stated today.

Should the Mexican Episcopate decide upon a renewal of the cult, it is understood that the Pope would not oppose it but his attitude is that there can be no compromise on the fundamentals of religious freedom.

MILITARY REVOLT.

After all, there is no country in the world whose government does not exist at sufferance of its army or its navy, as the case may be.

The newest of Europe's dictators, General Theodore Pangalos, who has been ruling Greece with just about as arbitrary a hand as that of Mussolini in Italy, having achieved a sort of Fascist control of the country fourteen months ago, is now summarily and effectually set down, without the ring of a shot, because the military forces of Greece came to the conclusion that they had had enough of him.

That is no proof that Pangalos is a weakling or a fool or anything of the sort. It is merely a demonstration of the usually forgotten fact that the real power behind all government, whether it is exerted or not, is force.

What could Doumergue and the French cabinet and parliament do about it if the army and navy should suddenly declare them deposed and a military board to be the sovereign power in France? What could King George and Premier Baldwin and the Commons and Lords do about it if the British army and navy should decide to run the country? What, for that matter, could President Coolidge and Mr. Borah and Jim Reed and the rest of them do about it if the United States army and navy should decide that the time had come for them to boss things? Just nothing.

Fortunately it is not often the temper of modern armies and navies to aspire to civil control. Probably most soldiers and sailors know that they would make a mess of it. But just the same they hold the orange in their hands and can squeeze it any time they see fit.

He faces the spending of the whole of it behind bars. So far as known Hanson never killed anybody. The crime for which he was sentenced in New York the other day was almost a trifling thing in the amount of money involved compared with many of the big ones that are now so familiar.

manly experience necessary to the rounding out of a successfully crooked life.

HOBBOES.

A very strange news item appears in this morning's papers. It is from Wyand, Ill., and tells of eight persons being killed in a freight wreck on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad.

There had been a widespread notion that there were no more tramps—that the genus hobo had become extinct in this country. The word "tramp," in fact, has almost disappeared from the language.

There are plenty of young people of voting age who would not recognize the typical old time hobo if they saw him, and who undoubtedly classify the rare stage representations of that individual along with Little Red Riding Hood and the rest of the Mother Goose people.

Yeggs there are still, of course—the yegg being the itinerant, safe blowing crook who used to travel "on the rods" along with the ordinary or "gayat" hobo.

That there were so many as eight old-fashioned railroad bums all put together would have seemed improbable. That such a number should have been bunched up in one freight car would indicate the existence, throughout the country, of an unbelievably large remnant of the old time hobo army.

AMBITIONS.

People—men, women and children—have singular ambitions. There was a man who wanted to own more different kinds of pieces of string than anybody else, and traveled all over the world for odd specimens; there are head hunters in Borneo, it is said, who risk their lives in battle over and over again, so as to possess the record number of dried top pieces.

There are men who would do anything to be elected alderman and women who almost faint with nervousness over it but persevere in their determination to show more of their knees than any one else in their sisterhood. But the queerest ambition we ever heard of was that of the girl who wanted to marry Harry Thaw.

Psychologists may be able to figure out the ambitions of such people as Mabel Willebrandt, Lady Astor or the New York janitress who sought the middle weight women's pugilistic championship of the Ninth ward, but the case of the California girl who flattered to Pennsylvania and besieged the Thaw country home for weeks in hope of dragging the murderer of Stanford White to the altar is one for the alienists—and the alienists are licked before they ever undertake the job.

RUSSIA.

It would be a courageous, a reckless or a specially well informed person who would predict the number of years or months that the present form of government in Russia will survive. But there are plenty of indications that the group now in control of the destinies of that great nation is facing times so stormy that out of them may, perhaps, emerge a new Russia, a materialization of the dream of Karenski—a Russia governing itself sanely, free alike from the tyrannies of czarism and the bloody despotism of the crimson Reds.

It is hard for news to come out of Russia—true news. But enough of it has leaked through to make it known that the Third International is as busy in its destructive attacks on the present organization of Russ society as in its war on the organization of every other nation. The "outs" are plotting against the "ins" as they always do and always will do in every society where the few ruthlessly rule the many. By and by this plotting will bear fruit—the fruit for the ripening of which the whole world has been waiting for years; the brutally dominating Reds will eat each other up and the Russian people, under honest, wise leadership, will come to their own.

earth, they are splendidly equipped for the restoration of their fatherland—when the time comes. It is drawing near.

ELIOT.

In the death of Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president-emeritus of Harvard university, America loses a figure practically unique. Essentially a scholar and theorist, and essentially also part of an institution of aristocratic leanings, the venerable educator was and all his life had been, an advocate of principles of the purest democracy.

That there were times when Dr. Eliot's outlook on the humanities ran counter to the hard-and-fast realities of life many persons will assert. But he was so often right—and vitally, passionately right—that his mistakes, if mistakes they shall prove them to have been, may well be forgotten.

His was a great and splendid mentality, and his was a sound and broadly charitable heart. Withal the simplicity of the man was almost childlike. Harvard, and with it American university culture, has received an impress from the hands of this great leader of thought which will not be erased by time. It is a broader and a better world for his having been spared to it for so long a time.

By CHARLES P. STEWART. Washington, Aug. 23.—If Secretary of Commerce Hoover ever becomes president, we know in advance just what kind of a government we will have. It will be exactly the kind we have now.

It's no secret in Washington that Hoover, subject to President Coolidge, has more than any other man to say concerning the present administration's policies.

In effect, he's prime minister. Now, a strong prime minister, who's fully trusted and much depended on by the potentate he serves, can run a government about as he sees fit.

That's the case with Secretary Hoover. Normally he only gives advice, but where advice always is accepted and acted on as the advisor suggests, it amounts practically to the actual shaping of the course the latter favors.

Hoover's advice "goes" with the President. As President, he'd act. As Secretary of Commerce, he advises and the President acts. That's the only difference. So, by observing this administration, we learn what Hoover's ideal of an administration is. It's a fair conclusion that, in the White House himself, he'd duplicate it.

It isn't in his own department alone that Hoover's interested. He's interested in the whole machinery of government. He's the father of the Coolidge policy of reorganization, simplification and reduction of governmental personnel—the consolidation of bureaus, the pruning out of all superfluous divisions, the accomplishment of more work with smaller staffs.

Economy and tax reduction are near to his heart. A "business administration"—that was his notion from the first, even in President Harding's day. It may seem as if Secretary of Agriculture Jardine was the one to make up the President's mind for him on the subject of farm relief legislation. But no, it was noticeable that Jardine never peeped while the subject was up in Congress, which was rather odd. It was Hoover who kept the administration's thumbs so firmly turned down on measures of the McNary-Haugen type.

Hoover's discreet in his methods. He doesn't proclaim from the housetops that he's the "whole thing." It wouldn't look or sound well. Secretary of the Treasury Mellon was the one who came out with the administration's denunciation of the McNary-Haugen bills as "economically unsound." For one thing, it was a highly unpopular utterance with the farmers. Hoover may have thought of that, too. Mellon, by the way, is the single individual in the cabinet whose influence at the White House stacks up pretty well with Hoover's, but Mellon's concern is solely in matters of finance, while Hoover's runs the gamut from international relations to the price of pins.

A THOUGHT

But he that did his neighbor wrong thrust him away, saying, Who made thee a ruler and judge over us?—Acts 7:27. If thou sustain injustice, console thyself; the true unhappiness is in doing it.—Democritus. The ordinary canary is greenish in its wild state, instead of yellow, as we know it.

IN NEW YORK

New York, Aug. 23.—In the "snappy Sixties" around which neighborhood now rises Manhattan's new apartment skyline, there stands a little church whose history is uniquely romantic. And just outside the church door there is a Rose of Sharon tree, transplanted from its exotic home soil to this shrubbery earth that grows only stalks of steel. Sort of monument to a divine poem, the tree seems, of a time too far away for thought. As might be expected in a ruthless metropolis, both tree and what it symbolizes go unnoticed by the millions. Only a few have clustered its aromatic bow with the fruits of their imagination and romance. So slight was the consideration for it that the neighborhood kids hacked it with a hatchet and all but killed it. The church, at the time, was too poor to spend in hiring a tree doctor, so they filled the hacked gap with tar and braced a torn limb. It grew together and flourished. The Church of Corpus Christi is the place and, if you come to New York, you'll find it on W. 9th Street. Father Rich will welcome you. For the church is his life work. It began in a dance hall, many years up and moved from there into an old house. When a beer garden threatened to move into the neighborhood—this was all before prohibition—a number of residents subscribed a sum sufficient to start a little building on part of the site (the beer resort might have occupied the church was built largely of timber from houses, torn down to make room for it. There wasn't quite enough for a whole church, and so it was little more than a basement with an altar rising above the parishioners. The ordinary casement windows have been turned into imitations of stained glass through the efforts of a young artist, eager to help the church. Instead of pews are ordinary straight backed chairs. Concrete was mixed by neighbors after working hours, with Father Rich assisting. Nowhere in this great city will be found a place of worship built so casually, or with such affection. A bit crude and rough, to be sure, but with sentiment in its every corner. And just outside is the Rose of Sharon tree, as incongruous in this city of commercial welters as the Egyptian monument that tells its story of another romantic civilization from its point of vantage at the side of the Metropolitan Museum. —GILBERT SWAN. DAILY ALMANAC This is the feast day of Saint Philip Benizi, whose religious fervor carried him to the head of the Order of Servites and nearly to the papal throne. His preaching restored peace to Italy. The cornerstone of Columbia College, New York, was laid, 1766. It is the birthday of George Matthew Adams.

QUEER QUIRKS OF NATURE

By ARTHUR N. PACK.

President American Nature Association.

When the shortening days of summer merge gradually into those of early autumn, and most of the more showy flowers have dropped their withered petals and are ripening their seeds, the golden rod and ragweed have their day.

By the dusty roadside, along the edges of fields where the crop of grain or forage has been garnered, on the banks of the stream plying its course toward the river, or even taking possession of the broad acres of an abandoned stretch of hillside or valley slope, the yellow-crowned favorite and its humbler associate fill their appointed destinies.

National Flower? Few there will be to praise the ragweed, and deservedly so, for we could well spare that troublesome plant, with its myriad scattering seeds planting trouble for the sinner of next year. Only the junco and sparrow from the north, that hardy tribe whose boreal nesting races design to visit us only in the winter months, have cause to bless its fecundity.

But the golden rod—who, unless he be a martyr to hay-fever, and believes that this peculiar plant causes it, does not love its belated beauty? So universally is it held in esteem that it has been seriously considered as a candidate for the honor of being the national flower.

Gaining in Favor. With a few exceptions the species are American, and a majority of the hundred-odd are North American.

Golden rod and ragweed.

They vary much in habit of growth, some flowering in a simple spike, while others branch in various ways.

Though golden rods have been little appreciated as garden plants, it is believed that they are gaining in favor. They improve by cultivation, the plants growing larger and more shapely, and the bloom tulle and more richly colored. They are easily transplanted and may thus be arranged to give the most pleasing effect, especially if combined with a hedge or group of some showy shrubs which develop bright contrasting colors as autumn approaches.

SESSION YESTERDAY ENDS CAMPMEETING

Dr. Rees's Sermon Completes Annual Gathering at Willimantic.

(Special to The Herald).

Willimantic, Aug. 23.—The sixty-seventh annual camping of the Willimantic camping association came to a close last evening with a sermon by Rev. Milton S. Rees, D. D., the evangelist, who has been on the grounds all the week, preaching every evening save one, when Bishop William F. Anderson of Boston, was the speaker. Dr. Rees has also conducted every forenoon at 11 a period on Evangelism. His pleasing personality and able presentations of scriptural truth have attracted large audiences at all the services.

The preacher yesterday morning was Rev. Philip L. Frick, radio preacher, of Schenectady, N. Y. This speaker has also been here all the week and his daily ten o'clock periods on "Psychological Interpretations of Religious Facts" have had a record attendance, for Dr. Frick has a wonderful way of making clear and plain this so-called abstruse subject. On Saturday evening he spoke to a capacity audience in the tabernacle, giving his popular lecture on "Nightingale Island."

Dr. Frick referred at the beginning to the biography of Edward Bok in the preface of which is a description of an island of the north coast of Holland, formerly bleak and barren, and a nest of pirates. The King ordered a young Dutch lawyer to clean out the place. After this was done, he thought he would plant trees there. After some years the island became well wooded, and the nightingales came in large numbers and filled the air with melody. The speaker then compared our earth to this island and vividly pictured the way in which God is driving out the pirates of evil. Slavery was driven out a few decades ago. Great applause followed the speaker's eloquent description of the recent driving out of the piratical legalized saloon.

Eventually greed and lust and war must go for the spirit of the living God is in these forward movements. More and more the nightingales of religion, education, purity, peace, love, sacrifice and brotherhood are singing over this little planet. It is for all of us to be co-workers with God in the transformation of this old world into a place of the nightingale's song. This gathering was also the occasion of the first appearance of the world concert tenor, Signor Capelli, whom some consider a second Caruso. He was welcomed to the platform by vigorous handclapping of the great audience, as it rose to its feet. Probably Willimantic campground has never welcomed before so distinguished a musical artist.

Signor Capelli is a man of fine personal appearance; with dark hair and smiling eyes. He is remarkably prepossessed and on taking the platform told in excellent English of his education in the Methodist College of Rome, of the real friendship premier Mussolini has for America, and that he welcomes the educational work which various Protestant denominations are doing in Italy.

Signor Capelli has but recently returned from a trip to Canada and Europe. He rendered several songs, but in English and Italian, exhibiting a voice combining both power and sweetness and singing with much expression. One of his songs was the Negro spiritual, "Going Home," and another was the favorite "O Sole Mio." Miss Roberta Bitgood of New London accompanied the signor on the piano.

It was estimated that some two thousand people were in the open air auditorium at the Sunday morning session. Before the sermon, Dr. C. E. Spaulding of New London presented the need of a thousand dollars and in a surprisingly short time over nine hundred was secured by cash and pledges. Signor Capelli sang two solos, Howard T. Pierce at the piano. Dr. Philip L. Frick of Schenectady, preached upon "The New Name" from Rev. 2:17.

In the afternoon a larger audience greeted Rev. Geo. H. Spencer, D. D. of Boston, who spoke from John 14:6. Signor Capelli rendered three selections, singing at the close, "Going Home."

At the closing session in the evening he sang again and the concluding sermon of the campmeeting was preached by the evangelist, Dr. Milton S. Rees, who is to conduct evangelistic services this fall in the larger centers on Norwich district, including Manchester.

Mrs. T. D. Martin is bringing up by hand a young robin which got lost from the parental nest in one of the windstorms lately. The bird has taken so kindly to civilization it is at home about the house or piazza, puts in an appearance regularly at meal times, and will perch fearlessly on the shoulder of members of the family or visitors. It seems to regard all human beings as friends. The bird prefers cooked food to worms, which it refuses. The bird will come at the call of its name, "Oliver Twist."

"Mr. Pike" put to sea from New York again the other day, headed for the Gold Coast of Africa. In life the leathery old salt is Fred Mortimer, first mate of the schooner Kingsway. In fiction he is "Mr. Pike" of Jack London's zestful story, "The Mutiny of the Elsinore."

Put Your Own Shop Window IN EVERY HOME IN MANCHESTER

Shoppers "See" Your Goods Through Ads In The Herald

MERCHANTS take extraordinary care that their store windows are attractively arranged. Why? Because the way in which goods are displayed in a show window often goes a long way toward selling the merchant's stock.

But, every shopper in Manchester can't see your show window day in and day out. Why not take your show window, your display of goods, right into the shopper's home?

That's what Herald advertising does. Your store's goods, the service you give, the bargains you offer are displayed to best advantage in the newspaper that everybody worthwhile in Manchester reads. TRY IT AND SEE!

The Herald In Every Home Is No Longer A Dream

WITHIN the past three years The Herald's circulation in Manchester has increased 18 per cent. No campaigns were conducted, no premiums were given, to earn this increase in the number of Manchester readers. A thoroughly good newspaper sold itself to those who were not already readers. New residents quickly saw the advantages a good home town paper gave.

This summer a Manchester High school student has been employed in a canvass of Manchester to learn if there were any local residents who did not read The Herald. This canvass reveals that The Herald enjoys a complete "coverage" of Manchester. MAKE THE HERALD WORK FOR YOU!

100% Manchester Coverage At Lowest Possible Cost

GETTING down to brass tacks, advertising means nothing more than CREATING A DEMAND. Mr. Merchant must show to Mr. or Mrs. Shopper that he has the goods that are needed or desired. But, how does Mr. or Mrs. Shopper know that YOUR price and YOUR quality are just what he or she wants?

CREATE THE DEMAND for your goods by persistently telling Manchester shoppers about your prices and about the quality of the goods you sell. The quickest, surest way, at the lowest possible cost is through Herald advertisements. Herald advertising rates are unusually attractive considering the results obtained. CALL 664 FOR QUOTATIONS.

THE HERALD doesn't want its advertisers to use space that isn't getting results. If business is lax, and Herald advertising doesn't boom it, there's something wrong. Perhaps the advertising space was proportioned poorly, or the "copy" didn't put the sales argument across properly. The Herald is prepared to aid its advertisers to avoid those mistakes. The finest advertising service in the United States is at the command of every Herald advertiser. Cuts, suggestions, "ad copy" will be furnished advertisers any time they desire to use space. CALL 664 AND ASK TO SEE THE "MEYER-BOTH" SERVICE!

THE HERALD is affiliated with the Newspaper Enterprises Association, the liveliest news feature syndicate in the world. No other newspaper circulating in Manchester can become a member of this organization. The latest ideas, the best feature stories, comics, fiction serials, and news pictures, the most up-to-date all around newspaper service, are thus assured The Herald alone in Manchester. That means growth, circulation increase, where it is reasonably possible. ADVERTISERS ARE AT ALL TIMES ASSURED OF A SOUND MEDIUM THROUGH WHICH TO SELL THEIR GOODS!

ALL-ROCKVILLE BLANKED ONCE MORE BY SILK CITY

Sons of Italy Add a 9-0 Defeat to the 12-0 Win Shamrocks Made Against Windy City Nine.

The All Rockville combination was no match for the Sons of Italy at the West Side Saturday afternoon and 14 hits made by the locals were responsible for nine runs and Rockville went home scoreless. Alexander pitched an airtight game and allowed only five hits for the visitors. It was the second severe drubbing by a Manchester team in two days.

P. Genovesi started for Rockville but was retired in favor of May in the early innings. It was a leisurely game and one in which the issue was never doubtful. Manchester scored at will and in several instances rather heavily while the visitors had all they could do to make second base occasionally. Alexander kept his hits well scattered and had complete control of the situation at all times.

Manchester hit hard and lustily, bombarding the visiting outfielders with safe hits whenever they pleased. Men on bases had no trouble making the rounds for there were always hitters to bring them in. St. John hit with his usual consistency and socked out two bingles on the home team. Others of the Sons who hit twice were Le Bell, who also made a double, and Wright.

Three runs came in right at the start of the game when St. John and Alexander hit with men on bases. St. John was responsible for another run with Sipples on second base. Partons was the second man on base in the fifth, following Alexander who had walked. The local pitcher came in on Wright's single. In the sixth Le Bell started the ball rolling with a double. He scored on Wright's single and Wright was subsequently scored when Sipples hit.

In the ninth Girattis singled to left field and was scored by Le Bell who singled.

The fielding of Le Bell and Sipples was one of the bright lights of the game. Burke, Doewich and Genovesi shone for the visitors.

FRANK FRISCH UNDER CARE OF A PHYSICIAN

New York, Aug. 23.—Denying that he had "jumped" the Giants because of differences with John McGraw, manager of the club, Frank Frisch declared his intention today of rejoining the team as soon as his health permits and "playing any position they want me to." He said that only ill health had caused him to return suddenly to his home here and his haggard appearance substantiated his statement.

He was ordered to bed by his physicians yesterday for three days of absolute rest, after which he plans to rejoin the Giants in Pittsburgh on Friday. It had been his original intention, he said, to report to McGraw in Cincinnati tomorrow.

Local Sport Chatter

The old rivalry between Manchester and Rockville is still there and the spirit is willing but the flesh is too weak. That condition exists on the other side, however. Rockville has been defeated consistently this year. Saturday's game against the Sons of Italy looked like a last desperate stand but the local boys were too fast for the team from the Hilly City. Rockville simply wasn't there in any department and was outclassed by the Sons, and Friday the Shamrocks beat them 12-0.

All roads will lead to Globe Hollow on Saturday for the big swimming meet which will decide the town championships. The usual duck chase will be included in and some lively birds have been purchased for this part of the program. In addition to the duck chase and the town championship events, three state title holders in diving will perform. They are Joe Maurice and Frank Sobral of Hartford and Wesley Warnock of this town. The latter will compete in the regular events.

This will not, however, close the pool for the year. It has been decided to keep the place open until September 10 if the weather continues to be good.

The North Ends will hold a meeting on Thursday evening at 7 o'clock at the home of Chip Charter.

Football practice has been called for the Cubs by Manager Nick Angelo for tomorrow night at the East Side playgrounds. The session will begin at 7 o'clock and all last year's men are asked to be on hand.

There is much interest over the outcome of the tennis match between the East Side and the West Side which will be played Wednesday evening at the West Side. O'Leary and Gato will represent the East Side and Gribbons and Graff will appear for the other section of the town.

The present cool weather has served to excite football interest about the town as it does each year when warm weather is given a back seat. One team had given notice of its first practice. Players at both ends of the town are already "feeling" football and would not be at all surprising if the fans of this merry little town were treated to a great clash between the North and the South this season.

BLOOMER, SPRINGFIELD, GIVES HARTFORD 1 HIT

Hartford, Aug. 23.—Joe Bloomer can blame Harry Heltman for robbing him of a no-hit, no-run contest here yesterday when, pitching for Springfield, he held Hartford to a lone banger, and that Heltman's two banger.

Successive singles in the second and fifth innings scored the Ponies runs. Springfield will not be seen in Hartford again this season.

STATE CHAMPIONS WILL SHOW WARES AT AQUATIC MEET

Globe Hollow Scene of Big Water Carnival on Saturday—Three State Title Holders to Be Here.

Those who attend the swimming meet at Globe Hollow on Saturday will have an opportunity to see three state diving champions perform. Two of the champs are residents of Manchester while the third is a Hartford man.

Joe Maurice of Hartford recently won the state A. A. U. diving championship and he will be accompanied here in his exhibition by Frank Sobral, a local product, who holds the state Y. M. C. A. diving title. The third champion is Wesley Warnock of this town who also holds a state championship Y medal.

It is expected also that the noted Mathieu twins of Willimantic will exhibit at the pool. These little girls, about 14 years old, are fancy divers and swimmers, one of their stunts consisting of swimming with their hands and feet tied. They are clear on the springboard and in the water with exhibition swimming strokes.

This will be only a part of the big meet that will decide the town swimming and diving championships for the women. Silver cups will be given high point scorers and ribbons for prizes in each event.

New York, Aug. 23.—If plans of the local American Legion materialize, Tiger Flowers, world's middleweight champion, will defend his title against Maxie Rosenbloom, New York, at the Polo grounds on September 8, it was announced today. Flowers engineered a successful defense of the championship against Harry Gray, from whom he won it last winter. COLLEGE HATTER

ART CARLSON
TWO STAR ACTS
In my mail the other day came this query: "What do you consider the two greatest performances hung up by college athletes in track and field competition of recent years?" That's a rather tough assignment when one recalls quite a number of sensational feats by college athletes have turned in lately. However, two stand out in bold relief, like silhouettes against the field. Charley Brookings of Iowa, who succeeded where more highly-touted boys had been unable to come through.

Brookings, in 1923, skipped the 220-yard low hurdles in the phenomenal time of 23 2-5. That day he blasted a mark that had withstood all assaults for a quarter of a century. For until '24, Hawkeye came along, no one had been able to excel the 23 3-5 record established by Alvin Kraenzlein, old Penn star, in 1898.

Not even the Smithsons, the Wendells, the Simpsons, the Johnsons and a host of other recognized timber-toppers could turn the trick and when they failed it appeared the Kraenzlein performance was certain to stand for a long time yet. But Brookings, the Junior at Iowa, succeeded where more highly-touted boys had been unable to come through.

Hubbard, as you'll doubtless recall, made his record-shattering effort in the running broad jump. He did it in the national collegiates at Chicago last summer, leaping 35 feet, 10 7-8 inches. Hubbard's leap broke the former mark hung up by Bob Legendre, ex-Georgetown celebrity, at the 1924 Olympics by four inches.

There was a bit of what the theatrical folk term "drama" attached to Hubbard's performance. For four seasons the colored boy had been trying to put over a new world mark. On several occasions he had come within whispering distance of it and once actually had beat the record only to have the jump disallowed because he had overstepped the takeoff. I saw Hubbard at the Big Ten meet the week before he made his record-breaking jump. He broke the conference mark that time, clearing "25-3 1-2" but again failed in an attempt to "better Legendre's figure."

Hubbard, however, still had faith in his ability, to establish a new record. And so did his coach, the veteran Steve Farrell. In fact, Farrell had remarked earlier in the season that his star would beat Legendre's effort before the end of the college campaign.

Hubbard's chance finally came at Chicago. On his very last trial as a wearer of the Michigan maize and blue, the ebony-hued lad hurtled through the air for a record apt to stand for quite a stretch. And not only did Hubbard get into the list of "world titleholders," but he also realized his pet ambition—to make the grade as a collegian.

To my mind the achievements of Brookings and Hubbard stand out as the two greatest in college competition of recent years. One battered down a record that had turned back a long and unusually talented group of challengers for 25 campaigns while the other tacked on four inches in an event that had known but little advancement since the days of Pat O'Connor, close to 30 years ago.

Suzanne's Double

DONA DUVAL THEIS

Over in France they call Dona Duval Theis the double of Suzanne Lenglen—and she does look a bit like the incomparable one, doesn't she? Miss Theis recently arrived in California where she will act as tennis teacher at Kentwood.

Whiffs 120!

Fanning 120 men in 70 innings is quite a feat, yet that is what Fred Sington, 16-year-old high school pitcher of Birmingham, Ala., has done in an amateur league of his home city. In addition, Fred has brought the leather at a .570 gait, getting five home runs. He's the youngest player in the league and though only a junior in high school has received offers from three Southern Association clubs. Fred says he's going to ditch college before giving pro ball a whirl, however.

TEAM WHICH SWAMPED LOCALS EASY PREY FOR JOE PRENTICE

Springfield Team Gets But Two Hits Who Win Despite Makeshift Lineup; Graff Stars.

(Special to The Herald.)
Springfield, Mass., Aug. 23.—Old Man Dope took another sock flush on the jaw here Saturday when the Shamrocks of Manchester, Conn., came here and upset all predictions, trimming the Wicos, 4 to 1. Only last Sunday the Wicos traveled to Manchester and gave the Shamrocks a severe drubbing right in their own back yard to the one-sided tune of 8 to 2. Thus it was expected that Saturday's return game would prove a walkaway for the home club.

Prentice is Hero.
In addition the visitors came here with a crippled lineup and had to draft two of the spectators into use to fill the gaps left when three of their team failed to appear. The pair of supposedly rookies, however, played a bang-up game. The real key to the Manchester victory, however, lay solely in the exceptional work of their pitcher, Prentice, a tall, stocky youth who had baffling speed and control galore.

One—Two—Three.
Prentice allowed one run to be scored against him in the first inning on an infield out and thereafter was a complete mystery to the locals. In six of the nine innings, the Silk City hurler retired the side in one-two-three fashion. He allowed but two separated singles, fanned seven and walked but one batter. It was a nifty exhibition, in fact, one of the best seen here this season against such odds.

Graff Wins Game.
Graff was the hero of the day for the Manchester team. He settled all doubts as to the winner in the ninth inning with the Shamrocks clinging desperately to a one run lead. Graff doubled scoring Smith and Mantelli at this critical stage. He was also instrumental in the other two runs scored by the Shamrocks.

Bristol Swamps Sons In Deciding Series Game

FISHER DRIVEN FROM MOUND BY HITS IN SEVENTH FRAME

New Departures Hit at Will and Smack Out 16 Hits; Manchester Leads Up to Fourth Inning.

Russ Fisher of the Sons of Italy, who held the Bristol New Departures to three hits last week, was driven from the hill in Bristol yesterday when the home team smashed out 16 hits and won 11 to 5. It was the deciding game of the five-game series, the Bristol team having won two before.

Bristol relied yesterday upon Thorpe who held Manchester almost helpless for the entire game. Wright, however, found the New Departure pitcher with regularity and made four out of five hits. In all the Sons made nine hits, most of them in the third inning, and were leading at that time.

The New Departures opened up with a bombardment in the fourth and sixth, scoring three in one of these innings and four in the other. Fisher had been replaced by Sipples who held the Echoes scoreless in the last two innings.

It was a Bristol day all through and even though the Endeas made two errors, Manchester couldn't seem to get the breaks. Fisher's removal of form was something nobody could account for but the Bristol batters found him at will and smashed his offerings for a double and two triples in addition to 13 singles. Reilly crashed out three singles while Zetarskie and Christie sent one each of their hits for extra bases.

Manchester made three errors, two of which were chalked up to McCann on second base. He was replaced by Stanton at that position. The locals had yesterday Scrimminger at first for the first time this season. The rest of the lineup was the same as that which defeated Bristol here a few days ago.

$500,000 FIGHT TICKETS ALREADY SOLD—RICKARD

New York, Aug. 23.—Estimating his advance sale of tickets at $500,000, Tom Rickard prepared to move his headquarters for the Dempsey-Tunney match to Philadelphia today. Virtually his entire staff of assistants at Madison Square Garden will accompany him and will remain on the scene until after the heavyweight championship bout is held in the Sesqui-Centennial stadium on the night of September 23.

Rickard declared before his departure that his total of reservations established a new record for orders a month prior to a match. He had estimated on Saturday that advance orders had reached the $200,000 mark but declared today that he had been three days behind in his checking up.

The tickets will be ready for distribution on Thursday and ticket offices under Rickard's direction will be operated both in New York and Philadelphia.

Dempsey, having broken camp at Saratoga, N. Y., was expected to launch with Mayor Kendrick in Philadelphia today, en route to his new quarters at Atlantic City. Tunney's new camp is yet to be selected. He will quit his Speculator, N. Y., quarters within the next two days.

Washington, Aug. 23.—An army of Washington pitchers proved themselves as useful as steam heat in the tropics when they bunched up against the rampaging Indians in a double-header. PICK ELIZABETH RYAN TO BEAT MRS. MALLORY

By DAVIS J. WALSH
New York, Aug. 23.—Molla Mallory and Elizabeth Ryan, respectively the old champion and quite probably the new, will settle the disposition of the National championship in women's singles this afternoon at Forest Hills, and possibly, the question of which of them is to be bludgeoned by a lot of slick city talk from C. Cashanarry Pyle. Indeed, common gossip already has linked the name of one finalist with C. Cashanarry's plans for the professional tour of Miss. Lenglen but as to that I cannot say. The gentleman has been rather austere when approached on this subject.

He was evasive on every inquiry except one. When I mentioned Mrs. Mallory's name, he chased conversational boxing and crossed a right. He said he wasn't interested in what Molla did and I guess he has the right idea, at that.

For Elizabeth Ryan should win the title by taking two of the three sets. She has the game, the experience and the heart. If she should happen to need anything else this afternoon she probably will find it. In fact, it is not at all certain that Miss Ryan would not have won this tournament, even if Helen Wills had defended her title.

For one thing, she has beaten Helen twice on the occasion of their only meetings. The first time the champion was absolutely "right", the second time, she wasn't. But right or wrong, tennis sharks have become convinced that Miss Ryan's chop strokes always will battle Helen because the latter lacks the speed to cover court adequately against them.

Last Inning Rally Defeats Cheney Brothers at Norwich

Cheney Brothers baseball nine dropped a hard fought contest yesterday afternoon in Norwich to the J. B. Martin Company. The game was not decided until the ninth inning. The score was 7 to 6.

Norwich led until the sixth to 3 but in the final frame, Manchester squeezed three runs over the plate tying the score. After Robb had struck out, Hanna and Plitt singled, Ritchie grounded out and Brennan walked filling the bases. They were occupied but a moment, however, for Bolsay inserted a timely double which scored the three runners and tied the score.

Norwich managed to score a tally in the last half of the stanza, however, and this was sufficient. Gly doubled, his third hit of the game, and scored later on Pettin's single. Pettin not only won his own game but pitched a fine game as did Ritchie, Cheney Brothers' imported hurler.

Ritchie and Bolsay both cast votes in Palmer, Mass. The latter was Ritchie's battery mate yesterday and both performed in a commendable manner. Bolsay made four hits in as many trips to the plate.

Scarcity of Pep Noticeable As Groton Takes Shamrocks Into Camp Again 5-2

It was a decidedly different team that took the field yesterday afternoon wearing the colors of the Shamrocks than it was in Springfield, the day before, not in person, but in morale. Saturday, it was a fighting bunch of ball tossers encouraged on to victory by a new-er-say-die spirit, but yesterday it was a different story. And as a result, the speedy Groton team came here and walked home a 5 to 2 winner, thus adding another win to their already overcrowded list of scalps. It was also the second victory of the season over the Shamrocks.

The dash and pep which was so conspicuous in the team-play of the Shamrocks the previous afternoon, was almost entirely missing yesterday. Had there been more of it, maybe the score would have been different. Anyway, it cost old Dan Smith his second successive setback. He was hit rather freely, nine bingles being made off his delivery. Pine, with three solid wallops, led the assault.

John was fascinated on meeting NELL ORME. Forbes hints she is having trouble with her husband, HOWARD ORME.

Fay took JUDITH, the baby, to visit her parents in Washington, and during her absence John "ran around" a good deal. When Fay returned gossip had retailed his doings and sharp quarrels followed, one of which drove him "out on a limb" and caused Fay to threaten to leave him.

John later encounters Nell Orme at Vera Boyd's—a plot of Vera's, who takes a keen delight in promoting "affairs"—and resolves not to see her again as he realizes she is carrying him off his feet. But he does, and the day comes when he takes her manly in his arms.

Fay learns of it and goes through with her threat and leaves her all his money, leaving her to fend for herself. When PAUL DAVIDSON, a friend, makes an unfortunate marriage and then deserts his wife, leaving her all his money, gossip begins to flay Paul and John has his hands full defending him. He is nearly crazy with grief because of Fay's action, while Fay is nearly heartbroken herself.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

ing fairly. Here is a man, young, fairly prosperous, handsome, possessed of a wife who is uncommonly attractive—and yet . . . He stopped, puffing reflectively on his cigar.

"It's something hard to explain. Very often the victims labor under the delusion that the rest of the world is in actual conspiracy against them. They feel that everyone is talking about them. And it is quite amazing, too, the various kinds of mentalities that it attacks. Orme, of course, is highly intelligent. Yet the last case that came to my attention was entirely different. He was a janitor, a rough, phlegmatic sort of fellow. He was working, silent. When he committed suicide it was found that he had a lot of money. Strange stuff, John."

"But what's the cause of it, Dick?" John asked. "There must be one."
"Oh, yes, there's an explanation for everything. But I have no idea what it is in this case. I presume he has some fancied grievance. Has his wife ever hinted at it?"

"Hinted, and that's all," John answered. "I think they quarrel a lot."
"Naturally," said Dick.

"What a peculiar thing, he thought as he made his way back to his apartment. What was behind it? Why should Orme be dependent? He sat up for hours before going to bed, his mind dwelling on Nell Orme.

Once more in the camera of his brain was the picture of the graceful Nell, flashing through the air in one of those beautiful dives from the springboard. And another picture of her with her hand resting on his arm, her lips upturned to his to receive that mad, impassioned kiss. . . .

But why, he had asked Meneffe, didn't Nell get a divorce—and Dick didn't know. But now John suddenly remembered something Pat Forbes had once said in answer to this question. . . . Nell had been brought up on the theory that divorce was wrong.

"And it is wrong, too!" he cried aloud at the sudden thought of Fay. . . .
Sooner or later, he saw, he must fortably, he thought nothing of the kind. She was obviously very much embarrassed. After another awkward moment or two, she took a few steps toward the door. John following, and at the threshold paused to say, "I really must see you. It's about Howard."

"All right," he agreed. "At Vera's. Any time you wish."
"She'll call you."
"All right." He smiled his goodbye, and, walking slowly back to his work, the thought struck him of how unpleasant it would be to go to Vera's again after the words he had had with Noel. Well. . . .

So it was that he half feared to answer the telephone every time it rang. But strangely enough the expected call did not come, though a week passed. He was beginning to think that the incident with Nell was closed, that perhaps his coolness toward her had frightened her off, or pleased her.

But he was wrong. Alone in his apartment one night, he heard a low knock on his door, and when he went to open it Nell Orme, her eyes reddened with weeping, stood before him.

"Why, Nell!" he exclaimed.
"Oh John," she cried, "you must let me in—you must listen to me." Her voice trailed off as she began to cry violently. At first he thought she was simply acting.

But supporting her with his arm, he led her to a chair and with nervous fingers found and lit a cigaret before he spoke again.

"Now for heaven's sake," he said, "compose yourself and tell me what's the matter."
"Howard—" she began and again fell to sobbing.

He saw then that he would have to wait, so he said nothing for quite a while but stood where he was, half leaning against a table, and watching her.

And finally, between fits of tears, she made John eyewitness to the scene she had just gone through with Howard.

There had been a violent quarrel—not the first by any means, nor was it the most common offenders in the neighborhood. Howard, however, insisted that John had come between them, and he was threatening divorce.

Finally, so maddened did he become by Nell's persistent denials, that he struck her in front of him as Nell Orme. Where now was all her poise, all her swag? Funny thing; he supposed all women did cry—but Nell Orme?

"I'm sorry," was all he had to say, and he hung up the receiver with the feeling that he had acted like a boor. Not until several hours later did the thought occur to him that by "Howard making trouble" Vera might have meant he had learned somehow of what existed between himself and Howard's wife.

This, indeed, was danger, and from an entirely unexpected quarter. What if Howard, like Fay, suspected them of something much more serious. . . . Well, he didn't see how things could get much worse than they already were.

He was busy with Briggs early that afternoon when Nell Orme dropped in the office, and John's first impulse was to be angry with her for this intrusion. But a reproachful look in her large eyes stopped him and forced from him a polite smile. And, despite himself, he again felt that thrill that he had always experienced in this woman's presence.

"You won't be angry?" she asked, a little hesitantly, and he smilingly shook his head and shrugged, thankful just the same, that Nat Graham chanced to be out at the time.

"I hadn't seen you in such a long time," she was saying, "and I did want to tell you how sorry I was. She added hastily, and a little confusedly, "I happened to be downtown shopping and thought I'd drop in. You think I'm bold, of course."

He assured her, a trifle uncomfortably, that he thought nothing of the kind.

And we don't want to be above anybody. We just want to be equal."
"Well, you'll have to decide that for yourself," said the doctor. "I'm not here to preach. But a little story just popped into my mind. I'll tell it to you. Just got married. When he came home one day and announced his engagement I happened to be there. 'Well, Charley, I hope you'll be very 'appy,' said I. 'You bet we'll be happy!' said Charley. 'We do a darn thing alike and we haven't a taste in common. Jane's a prize! Everything she does is different. She doesn't even smoke! I think if I married a woman who smoked, I should stop it myself. My wife's just got to be different. I won't have her being me.'"

"Sweet disposition, I'd say," said the girl in bed.
"Not so good," said the doctor, "but he's a typical man."
That night the doctor said to his wife, "I had to spring that 'Charley story' again. It's the only thing that gets them. Mind you, that nice little Brown girl wants to smoke just to be smart! Isn't it a shame?"

CONDITION—Blackheads.
DIAGNOSIS—These troublesome unbecoming objects often accompany an oily skin and enlarged pores.

TREATMENT—Cleanse the face carefully, steaming it if the blackheads are obstinate. Then place a blackhead remover, or a watch key over the spot and the blackhead will be forced out. Cleanse your instrument after each removal, and wipe the spot with peroxide of hydrogen or alcohol. This is infinitely preferable to removing the blackheads by squeezing with the fingers, which is often the cause of infection. By washing carefully with a complexion brush and pure soap, you can keep them away once you have removed them.

Good Nature and Good Health

TESTS WILL SHOW HAY FEVER ORIGIN

BY DR. MORRIS FISHBELN
Editor Journal of the American Medical Association and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine.

During the spring, tree pollens are the most common offenders in causing hay fever. In the early summer, the grasses, the rose, corn and the pollens of flowers such as the daisy, the dandelion and the lily, and those of such weeds as pigweed, smartweed, pepper grass and dock are concerned.

According to I. Chandler Walker, in the northern and mountain counties of California and in Oregon and Washington, timothy is much grown for pasture, and is an important cause of hay fever from June through August. Red top is a frequent cause from June through September, orchard grass from March through August, and so on through hundreds of plants which pollinate and to which some persons may be sensitive.

Try Each Pollen
The physician who is trained in the investigation of this disease is the person who must determine whether or not the sufferer from hay fever is sensitive to any special pollen. The method by which he does this is relatively simple:

A small scratch is made on the inner surface of the forearm, not deep enough to draw blood, but deep enough to penetrate the outer layer of skin. A small amount of the dried pollen of the plant suspected is placed on the scratch, moistened with a drop of weak alkaline solution and kept moist for thirty minutes.

Since the scratch is only one-eighth of an inch long, a great many tests may be made at one time. At the end of half an hour the material is washed off and the reaction of the skin to the pollen is studied. Several scratches are made and moistened with the alkaline solution but pollen is not applied. These are used to check the reaction against those with pollen.

It has been found that the pollen which does not affect the patient do not produce any change in the skin, so that the scratches into which they were rubbed look like the scratch into which no pollen was rubbed. If the patient is sensitive to any pollen, there is itching and swelling of the skin around the cut for a space from one inch to two inches wide. This becomes more intense and the swelling increases in size the longer the pollen is kept on the scratch. The spot looks, in fact, much like a hive or mosquito bite. When this occurs, the patient is said to have a positive reaction.

Within an hour or two the itching or swelling disappears and after a few days the scratches heal without leaving any scar.

The only tests that physicians have constantly used to describe this reaction is the statement that the person is sensitive to the pollen. In any event, the proof is absolute that certain persons react severely to exposure to certain pollens and that hay fever is the manifestation of this reaction.

A WOMAN'S DAY ABROAD

BY ALLENE SUMNER

Venice, Italy, Aug. 23.—Some women, a dubious few, may come to Europe to see the leaning tower of Pisa, and the Roman forum.

But a howling mob of 'em, a hundred thousand million, come for the great shopping bat of their lives—come with blood in their eyes, and strength in their elbows to battle their way into the bargain jam of beaded bags today!

Florence may mean the birthplace of Dante and the huge canvas upon which Michelangelo hung his wizardry to one or two feminine souls! But to a hundred million it means the place where flaminated and colored leather Florentine bags may be purchased for five dollars.

Venice may mean Saint Mark's and the Doge's Palace to one or two but to a molling mob it means Venetian point collars big enough to girdle a humming bird's buxom throat, for the simple price of twenty dollars.

Uncle Sam allows free passage for a hundred dollars worth of loot to each returning female of the native soil.

This means that the hotel lobby conversation over the entire expense of Europe consists of the respective merits of smuggling rings in toothpaste or cold cream, and the maximum weight permitting one to "wear in" three dresses.

Perhaps there is a certain bitterness in my soul today on the great European shopping question. There's a reason. In the shape of a certain soft suede handbag in the suitcase which my duenna, Pansy Herring Pretzel, packs with faithful care some four times weekly, as we fit from Rome to Florence, from Florence to Venice.

The bag in question looked heavenly in Florence. It was marked 350 lire. But one learns after the first shopping spree that appearances are only tag deep when it comes to price tags abroad. After much hand conversation it became mine for the sum of 190 lire; about six dollars and sixty cents.

Now we are in Venice, city of Lagoons and mosaic beads. And here my bag, once so fair to see, rests in no less than 16 windows, for the sum of 100 lire.

This is the lesson of shopping in Europe. Go south, young man, go south!

The early bird catches the lucre. But as one nears the sun and one's family purse grows thinner and skinnier, the prices tumble like Lillian Letzel from the big top.

Perhaps you must have a Parisian gown? But make up your mind that if you must you will devote every waking and sleeping moment in Paris to that gown, and that gown only!

Parisian courtiers would no more sell a ready-made gown than the wine connoisseur would drink orange pop!

Madame must call and call and call again. Finally "the creation" which is the one and only "creation" for madame is designed. Then come fittings daily and one may receive ones "creation" and the bill within three weeks if all goes well.

The bill? I heard a few women speak raptly of "the perfectly sweet little gown I got for forty dollars!"

Paris is, however, the place to buy your kid gloves. Few women escape with fewer than ten pair. The softest suedes, hand-sewn, may be bought for less than 75 cents.

Paris, too, is the place for opera glasses, confections of beauty in cloisonne and gold with sticks that make one resemble the Duchess of Something—six dollars.

You will buy perfumes of a hundred odors. A dollar perhaps for the five-dollar size you buy at home. At Grasse where the perfumes of the world are made, you will buy more.

The first places!
Now a few beware about your European shopping; Be careful of For instance on the way to Monte Carlo you pass through an accident

HER OWN WAY

A GIRL OF TODAY

A BOMBHELL

Mr. Elkins and his son left shortly after and Joan was called away. John Meredith did not rise as his sister left the room. He still sat in the big chair. I knew he was determined to sit there until I also left. I was, however, determined that he should not, for I knew that every time he gave in to his sensitiveness over his crippled leg and arm, it became worse.

"I hope you will pardon me, Mr. Meredith, but I must tell you that I think you have been very selfish to leave your sister to the care of strangers as you have done all these years."

"Do you, Miss Dean?"
The question was coldly insolent. "Yes, I do. You think you're the most unfortunate man in the world just because you happened to have been born with a deformed hand and foot."

"Miss Dean, I think you forgot yourself."
"Perhaps, but I am going to tell you a few unpleasant truths."
"I hardly think so, Miss Dean. I shall ring for my sister immediately and tell her that I cannot stay in this house."

I laughed. "You are a coward, aren't you?" I said. "Your mind is more deformed than your body and I really think your soul is warped."
This had the desired effect. John Meredith, I expect for the first time in his life, forgot that he was a cripple. He suddenly arose to his feet in a blind rage and limped across the room and punched the bell. Then he turned his back on me. The man answered his ring and told him that Miss Meredith had gone out.

"What do you know about your sister?" I asked.
He looked at me, startled.
"Why—why—why," he stammered. "I think she is one of the prettiest girls I ever saw and probably one of the most fortunate beings on earth. She can have her every wish."

"Do you think so?" I asked.
"What do you mean?" he queried.
"What if I should tell you that your sister has never been very happy?"

Again he spoke in a softer voice. "What do you mean by that?"
"I mean that Joan has been left entirely to strangers. She never has had love, which, of course, is the one thing she has wanted. You should feel a great sympathy for her, because this is the one thing you have always wanted."

"How do you know that?" he asked.
"Because you have deliberately avoided all human contact, except that which you have bought and paid for. Because you have thought only of yourself and left your sister to outsiders."

"I thought she was happy," he apologized.
"You had no business to think so. Do you know that a girl in her position is one of the most unfortunate in the world?"

He smiled desolately.
"That's absolutely true. A girl that has so much money that she has everything done for her, only has to do what you, yourself, have been doing—think of herself. Joan has become bored to death with everybody, and everything, until a few months ago, when she fell in love with a dancing man, one who haunted public dance halls."

"Heavens, how did my sister happen to go to such a place?"

And we don't want to be above anybody. We just want to be equal."
"Well, you'll have to decide that for yourself," said the doctor. "I'm not here to preach. But a little story just popped into my mind. I'll tell it to you. Just got married. When he came home one day and announced his engagement I happened to be there. 'Well, Charley, I hope you'll be very 'appy,' said I. 'You bet we'll be happy!' said Charley. "Sweet disposition, I'd say," said the girl in bed.

The Charley Story.
by Olive Roberts Barton.

Once a young girl was sick in bed. The family doctor came and felt of her pulse and looked at her throat and then prescribed calomel and castor oil and said she'd be all right in a day or two.

Beside her on the night stand was a cigarette butt and some ashes. The doctor poked it with his finger. "Is this yours?" he asked.
"No," said the girl, "it's Dad's. He was in just before you came. I wish it was mine."

"Why?" said the doctor.
"Oh, because I'm a back number," said the girl. "I feel like Priscilla when I go any place. Tell me, doctor, is it bad for you to smoke?"

Mrs. Mary Shea, aged 64, of 21 Newman street, went to Sound View three weeks ago to spend a vacation. Two days ago she was suddenly taken ill and yesterday morning at 3:30, died. A complication of troubles was the cause. Mrs. Shea's death came as a big surprise as she had apparently been in good health previously. Saturday, the widow's five children, Alice, Viola, Mary, Fred and Paul, unaware of their mother's illness, left for Sound View to spend the week-end as they had done the two weeks before. When they arrived at the cottage, they were surprised to learn their mother was ill. A doctor was summoned but her condition was not considered alarming. Early yesterday morning, however, she suffered a relapse and passed away shortly afterward. Her five children were at the bedside when she died.

Mrs. Shea was born in Ireland and had lived in Manchester nearly all of her life. The funeral service will be held tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock at St. James' Church. Burial will be in St. James' cemetery.
