

RUDNER TAKEN FOR MURDER OF DON MELLETT

Massillon Merchant Is Arrested on First Degree Charge; Three Indictments Due Today.

Canton, O., Sept. 3.—Three men today were indicted by the Stark county grand jury for the murder of Don R. Mellett. They are Louis Mazer, habitue of "Little Cicero" and alleged "big scale" bootlegger; Ben Rudner, former bootlegger and ex-inmate of the Atlanta penitentiary; Patrick Eugene McDermott, reputed professional thug and hired triggerman and "key witness" in the murder.

Canton, O., Sept. 3.—Ben Rudner, Massillon hardware merchant, was arrested today on a first degree murder charge in connection with the Don R. Mellett assassination.

Rudner, a former bootlegger and inmate of Atlanta penitentiary, was taken into custody in Massillon, seven miles from here where he operates a retail business.

County authorities made the arrest upon the request of County Prosecutor C. B. McClintock.

Rudner was to be brought to Canton immediately.

Secret Arrest.

It was the second arrest in the long drawn out murder inquiry.

Louis Mazer, friend of Rudner's, was arrested about three weeks ago in Cleveland on a first degree murder charge. Mazer is also charged with violation of the national prohibition act.

Patrick E. McDermott, alleged hired triggerman and "key witness" for whom a nation-wide search has been instituted, is still at large.

It has been semi-officially announced that the grand jury today will indict three men, jointly, for first degree murder.

The last of the six witnesses to testify in the startling murder case completed their presentation of evidence this morning.

Rudner, the son of a wealthy Canton junk dealer, was first brought under suspicion by the testimony of Steve Kaschok of Nanty Glo, Penn., a miner and star witness in the circumstantial case that has been brought against the two alleged murderers.

Kaschok has testified and made sworn affidavits, now a matter of record, that he went to Massillon with McDermott where they were "hired to slay an editor."

The evidence in the possession of investigators shows that McDermott motored to Massillon about ten days after the murder, and stopped near the Rudner place of business.

According to testimony offered by Peggy Cavanaugh, Cleveland waitress, who accompanied him on the trip, McDermott returned to the automobile with a large roll of bills.

That was two days before the elusive McDermott was last seen.

Miss Cavanaugh is now being held as a material witness in the county jail here in default of $10,000 bond.

He Can't See the Sea; He Paints It, You See

That may be a play on words. Still it tells the story of a Manchester man who because of circumstances could not go to sea after his first voyage but who in his dreams is just as much a sailor as any man who ever trod the decks of a four sticer.

It is not a tale of storms and hard fisted mates or of hard boiled sailors. There are no shipwrecks in his story. He never was cast away on a desert island. His arms are not tattooed. In his speech he does not even say, "Belay there, mate."

Yet this Manchester man can paint the picture of any kind of a sailing vessel from memory. Even to the tiniest rope.

PICKED WRONG STORY OR THE WRONG BOSS.

New York, Sept. 3.—Everybody's picking "an Jacob Cohlet."

Cohlet has a long record himself as a pickpocket, police said.

TREASURY REPORT PUBLISHED IN FULL

George H. Waddell's Statement of Town's Finances On Page 6 Today

Manchester's taxpayers will have a good opportunity to study how economically the town's business has been conducted this past year by studying the Town Treasurer's report which will be found on Page Six of today's Herald. This report, which has in previous years appeared only in the annual town report, is published in The Herald today at no expense to the town. It is The Herald's policy to keep the voters and taxpayers of Manchester as well informed on the town's government as possible.

Study It! Town Treasurer George H. Waddell completed his report yesterday afternoon. It is unnecessary to make comment on it since the taxpayers can glean considerable information by carefully reading the report through.

While some of the town's appropriations have been overdrawn others have been kept down so that on the whole the Board of Selectmen kept well within the allowance the tax rate made for expenditures. The highway appropriation would have been within the budget estimate had not unusual conditions made extra expense in snow removal necessary.

Turn to Page Six for the complete treasury report.

KIDNAP PRIEST WHO EDUCATES NEGROES

Governor of Virginia Called on To Act in Outrage by a Masked, Robed Mob

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 3.—Public indignation over the kidnaping of Rev. V. D. Warren, a Catholic clergyman, reached such a stage here today that appeals were sent to Richmond to have Gov. Byrd intercede and order a state investigation.

Father Warren conducts a school for poor colored children. Wednesday night, while attending an open air concert given by the boys' band of his school, a crowd of about twenty masked and robed men seized him and drove away in automobiles. The clergyman was driven some thirty miles and then questioned concerning his work among the colored people.

The priest was unhurt, but was left to make his way back home as best he could. He reported that one of his questioners said "We don't want negroes educated down here."

STATE'S ROADS EARN 23 P. C. ON COST, SAYS U. S.

Service Value Over 5 Million A Year, Conn. Highways Pay for Themselves in About 48 Months.

Hartford, Sept. 3.—Connecticut's improved highways are of so much value to their users that the highways system "earns an annual return of approximately 23 per cent on the investment," and their use really repays the cost of their construction in a little over four years. Such is the result of a survey made by the Federal Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Public Roads and the Connecticut State Highway Department, released here today.

Connecticut has 1,114 miles of improved highways valued at upward of $23,000,000 and the service value is set at $5,334,000 per year. The results were obtained in a study of traffic made between September, 1922, and September, 1923 when 414,000,000 vehicle miles of use were noted. Passenger vehicles were six times as numerous as trucks.

MEXICAN CONGRESS STRONG FOR CALLES

Ministerial Statements Are Claimed—Episcopate Scents Bolshevism

Mexico City, Sept. 3.—Ministerial statements during the opening sessions of the congress have been received with such acclaim that there is no doubt that the Calles administration has the full backing of the congress, in both its economic and religious policies.

Minister of the Interior Trejeda, who was co-author of the religious regulations which have caused the controversy with the Catholic Episcopate, was given a great reception when he arose to address the congress.

The Episcopate has issued a lengthy statement, commenting on the message of President Calles in opening the congress and charging the president with "a calumnious attack on the church" in making the allegation that it has fostered rebellious elements. The statement also declares that certain phases of the speech "savor of Bolshevism."

The Episcopate is continuing its endeavors towards a program of legislative reform and hopes to be able to have it presented in congress shortly.

Accepts Skeptics' Challenge To Cure "Hopeless" Cancer

New York, Sept. 3.—Dr. C. Everett Field, head of the Radium Institute of New York, has accepted the challenge of skeptical members of his profession to prove his contention that 25 per cent of the so-called "hopeless" cases of cancer can be cured by the use of Koch Anti-toxin.

The challenge was issued by Dr. D. Bryson Delevan, head of the American Society for the Control of Cancer, whose members include most of the best known specialists of the country.

So now Dr. Field has agreed to cure some "hopeless" cases, and to do it at his own expense, just to show that what he says is true. In fact, the skeptics may even pick the cases to be cured. He has appointed a jury of five medical men to be appointed to watch his treatment and to pass on the results.

Today he reiterated his statement, which caused an uproar in medical circles, that at least one quarter of the cancer cases classed as incurable could be cured completely by his treatment, or rather the treatment developed by Dr. William F. Koch of Detroit.

More than 600 cases stood on the docket, with the prospect of many more being added before the court convenes October 2, after the summer recess.

SPAIN FORMALLY TO LEAVE LEAGUE

Geneva, Sept. 3.—Spain is expected to make an announcement shortly of her withdrawal from the League of Nations, it was stated semi-officially here today.

The order denying Fonck the use of the plane for the present, does not prohibit Berry from taking it out, Berry having a test pilot of the Sikorsky company.

One can't eat in London during early September without oysters to the right of them and oysters to the left of them, and the prince has gone to France where the oyster is not made the predominant note in the autumn menu.

An offer of $500 for a picture of the prince eating an oyster is still unclaimed.

LINK DEATH OF GIRL WITH HALL MURDER CASE

Mystery of Agnes Bezeale, Found Dead in 1923, Probed Because She Was Carpenter's Nurse.

Somerville, N. J., Sept. 3.—A possibility that the mysterious death of Miss Agnes Bezeale, a student nurse, in 1923, might have some connection with the murder of Rev. Edward W. Hall and Mrs. Eleanor Mills was being run down by investigators today.

Miss Bezeale, whose death was ascribed to suicide at the time, was nurse for Henry B. Carpenter of the latter's paternal uncle in the Middlesex county hospital during the sessions of the Somerset county grand jury which refused to indict Mrs. Frances S. Hall, Carpenter's cousin.

Both Mrs. Stevens and Carpenter, together with her brother, "White" Stevens, are now held for the murders.

Found In Creek. The girl's body was discovered in the shallow water of a creek a month after she disappeared. The discovery followed a telephone call to the New Brunswick police by a man who said a girl's body was lying in the water. This man's identity was never learned.

Inspector John Underwood, chief of the detectives, characterized any possible link between the suicide and the murders as "bunk." He said, however, that the affair would be investigated, due to the coincidence of Miss Bezeale's having nursed Carpenter at the time of the previous investigation.

Meanwhile, the authorities continued their efforts to batter down the alibi of Henry Stevens, another brother of Mrs. Hall, who was drawn into the case again a few days ago. Stevens claims to have been fishing fifty miles away from New Brunswick on the night the murders were committed. Today a group of women from his home town, Lavettte, N. J., joined the corps of twenty-one witnesses who have declared themselves ready to swear to the authenticity of Stevens' alibi.

To Question Seven. Upon the outcome of the questioning of seven witnesses at Toms River today by Prosecutor Simpson depends the validity of Stevens' alibi, it was said. A squad of deputy sheriffs have been assigned to watch the Stevens' home.

Father Doubts. New Brunswick, N. J., Sept. 3.—Prof. John Bezeale, of Rutgers University, today expressed doubt regarding the report that the death of his daughter, Agnes Bezeale, in 1923, had any connection with the Hall-Mills murder.

Prof. Bezeale said his daughter never told him she was nursing Carpenter.

The Bezeale girl was reported to have told her aunt, Mrs. Adda Tremple, formerly of New Brunswick, N. J., now of Cincinnati, of incidents connected with a certain nursing assignment.

Threat Against Hall. New information of an alleged threat made to the Rev. Edward W. Hall by a relative of his wife's because of his relations with Mrs. Eleanor Mills has been received by the investigators, it was learned today.

Henry Stevens' alibi, that he was fishing with friends in Lavettte, fifty miles away from the scene of the murders is being thoroughly investigated, but apparently Prosecutor Alexander Simpson is not at all sure he can break it, for he said today that "we want to get this thing out of the way one way or the other."

Particular attention is being paid to clearing up the discrepancies between the statements of two of Stevens' alibi witnesses, William Egger, of Chicago, and Arthur Applegate.

Virtual Prisoners. Pending further investigation Stevens is under the most rigid surveillance of two deputy sheriffs at his home. The guards are under instruction to let Stevens leave the county in no circumstances, and he is virtually a prisoner. All known facts regarding his movements on the night of the murder will be presented to the grand jury, Simpson has announced.

The prosecutor and his detectives have offered the names of four men and one woman who were on the Phillips farm at the time of the killings, it was announced. Two of these witnesses are supposed to be "A. L." a Newark taxi driver whose identity is being shielded, and his woman companion, who has sent the authorities an affidavit from her home in the west.

"We expect to find the others within a short time," said one of the investigators, "and we think they will corroborate the story of Mrs. Jane Gibson, who said she saw Mrs. Hall leaving over the body of her murdered husband while the two men looked on."

Two of the others, it is thought, may be a man and his son whose home is in White Haven, Pa.

NO VALENTINO-NEGRI PACT, LATEST REPORT

Dr. Wyman Puts Denial of Oft Exploited Engagement up to Manager Ullman.

New York, Sept. 3.—Rudolph Valentino and Pola Negri were not engaged, but the famous movie star refused to deny the reported romance because "it will help Pola," a New York newspaper stated today.

"This startling disclosure," the newspaper continues, "was made today despite Pola's dash across the continent to the bier of the great screen lover, despite her earful collapse at the funeral, despite her vow that 'I can never love again.'"

"It was made by Doctor Sterling C. Wyman, who was Miss Negri's constant attendant during her stay in New York. Dr. Wyman said the facts were given to him by S. George Ullman, Valentino's manager and friend, who, strangely enough, was among the first to affirm public reports of the engagement."

Ullman told him, Dr. Wyman states, that there is no foundation for the talk of an engagement between the screen's most romantic stars. Ullman is said to have remarked: "If there was an engagement, then Rudy and I knew nothing about it."

Ullman made this revelation during a conversation with the physician two days ago, Dr. Wyman said.

OVER 1,000 PRESENT AT PLAY CARNIVAL

Crowds Gather too Near Stage and Few Able to See Performance at East Side

Notwithstanding the tremendous handicap of staging an entertainment on a small space jammed by a crowd of over 1,000 men, women and children that was constantly surging forward eager to view proceedings, the Playground carnival at the East Side playgrounds last evening was a success.

Here is what caused the congestion! The entertainment was staged on the small cement floor in the rear of the Nathan Hale school. The floor and the ground immediately adjoining it are situated on a slight decline. The crowd in which there were many small children surged forward further and further until its advance guard was well onto the stage.

Efforts of two policemen and a dozen sturdy young men who flanked hands proved insufficient to hold back the ever-surgeing gathering. And the closer they pressed, the more impossible it was for those in the rear to see because of the slope of the ground. The sentimental gathering was at least twenty-five deep in rank. And of these only the first five or six rows could see the entertainment and they had to tussle repeatedly with others to hold their positions, else they were elbowed to the rear.

From the blue cap and ever smiling face of Patrolman Walter Cassells as he made his almost futile attempts to push the surging mob back, a few too was laboring under a handicap. For he could not use too much force because of the danger of injuring the little tots in the front rows.

SNUBS THE REPORTER; IS NOW COMING STAR

Snubbing a Herald reporter who attempted to interview her recently has brought pretty freckle-faced Myrtle Muir additional honors.

For The Herald "Newgirl Venus" is today acclaimed by hundreds of Manchesterites because of her splendid showing last night in the "Kiddies Revue" at the State Theater.

Program Delayed The program was delayed fully twenty minutes while the policemen and assistants vainly attempted to thrust back the crowd.

The first number on the program was a dance, Lindy Lee by four girls garbed as Southern mummies. The dancers were Marion Motean, Muriel Tomlinson, Ida Anderson and Alwine Winkler.

This was followed by a short sketch entitled, "Little People of Autumn." In the cast were Rose Aloisio, Nellie Galli, Tresie Pachy, Minnie Brozowski, Annie Washkewich, Jennie Valeri, Mary Gulistanian and Prelina Pachy.

the crowd made it impossible to hear them from a distance. The next number on the program was a Yankee Doodle dance by Ursula Segerdahl and Janice Remig. Both wore sailor costumes and performed well.

Then followed an exhibition by a class of young tumblers who have been trained by "Dodger" Dowd. This act was especially interesting and showed the boys have gained a vast amount of acrobatic knowledge from Mr. Dowd's training.

A dance, "There Was An Old Man" had for a cast Marjorie Motean, and Muriel Tomlinson. This was also well executed.

The final act on the program was without a particle of doubt the best. It was the ten members of the Hartford Turnbund who came here free of charge to provide entertainment. The cleverness of the stunts they performed on the parallel bars is worthy of a column of space.

Those in Charge In addition to Miss Geary there are several other persons who deserve credit for the success of the carnival. Miss Laura Glidden, who taught the clog dancing to the children.

This was followed by a short sketch entitled, "Little People of Autumn." In the cast were Rose Aloisio, Nellie Galli, Tresie Pachy, Minnie Brozowski, Annie Washkewich, Jennie Valeri, Mary Gulistanian and Prelina Pachy.

Started at Least in Company With English Cabby But Her Whereabouts Are Unknown. Cape Gris Nez, Sept. 3.—Unhappily and unannounced, two humble swimmers, a man and a woman plunged off the Gris Nez rocks early today in an effort to swim the English channel in record time.

The woman, shrouding herself in mystery and calling herself Miss Mona McLaren, of Folkestone, is reported to be making the attempt in order to win the $5,000 prize offered by the "News of the World," a British publication for the first woman swimmer to break Gertrude Ederle's record.

The man is Horace Carey, a bus driver of Folkestone. Both swimmers took the water at 5:19 this morning. At 4:30 this afternoon it was reported that the bus driver was still swimming, but there was no information regarding the mysterious Miss McLaren, whose whereabouts were unknown.

Bostonian and British Balked Dover, Eng., Sept. 3.—Louis Timson of Boston, who planned to start an attempt to swim the English channel last night, abandoned his plans early today due to the fog. What a Fireman Thinks Of!

"Smoky Joe" Martin, 42 Years in Game, Says It Isn't Fame or Own Safety That Stirrs Mind Beneath the Helmet.

By LEON M. SILER.

New York, Sept. 3.—It's a little more than 42 years now since "Smoky Joe" Martin went into the fire-fighting business.

Destiny so ordered things that "Smoky Joe" was born and grew up just half a block from a fire station. This was down on 13th street.

He listened to fire bells all through his babyhood, and gravitated unfeeling around to the nearby station each day after school when he became of short pants age. No member of the Martin family was surprised when at 19, Joe announced that the New York fire department was to be the field of his quest for fortune and fame.

He's assistant chief now, and known the country over.

His record is a long succession of citations for courage, fidelity, good judgment.

But it isn't fame a fireman thinks about when the fire bells ring. "Smoky Joe," grizzled, and past 60, remembers plenty of close calls. Back in 1898 he tried to make his way across the third floor of a burning building on Walker street. He took a few steps, then went crashing through to the basement.

On this and half a dozen other occasions "Smoky Joe" had to go to a hospital. Scars on his body are almost as numerous as words of praise on his efficiency record. But it isn't of his own safety of which a fireman thinks when the fire bells ring.

Here in New York, the picture that flashes through a fireman's mind as he slips on his helmet is a picture of people crouching, terror-stricken, in reddened windows. "Once you see them jump, you never forget it," says "Smoky Joe." "Night time is worst. As the truck goes roaring along the street you wonder how many there are to be rescued, and whether you will get there in time.

"If you're going into a congested district, you know that in a single building dozens of families may be cooped up.

"People lose their wits—for which it's hard to blame them. They rush madly around trying to save a cat or a trinket, instead of closing all doors—to keep down drafts—and going to windows to make sure that they themselves will be saved.

"And then if they do go to the windows, instead of climbing down the fire escapes or waiting for ladders, they jump.

"It's a strain to think of these things every time there's an alarm, I tell you. I've had 42 years of it—I know."

But there was no lack of stiff control on the part of a man Chief Martin saw rescued in a New York fire of about a month ago.

"I saw him in a window 75 feet from the ground as I got there," Martin tells.

"Smoke was pouring out around him, and I said to myself: 'He's gone.'"

"But an extension ladder truck swung around on the fly.

"The ladder shot up, and I saw it was barely long enough.

"The point of it swerved toward the window. But the fellow's perch was too hot—he couldn't wait. His only chance was to meet the ladder half way.

"He jumped. And he caught the top rung, and held on. It is encouraging to think about things like that."

Broadway Plays In Main Woods Draw Audiences From 100 Miles

Portland, Me.—Broadway and Forty-second Street, New York City, is known all over the world. But now this metropolitan center has a rival in the heart of the Maine woods.

This seeming miracle has been accomplished by H. L. Sweet, manager of the Somerset Traction Co., which operates Lakewood Park, six miles north of Shawhegan. He has done it by devising a way of attracting each summer some of the country's leading actors, authors, playwrights and newspaper men who seek rest and relaxation from their winter season's activities.

Mr. Sweet has built a theater, furnished twelve attractive cottages and a community house for his actors and actresses along the shores of Lake Wesserunnet and thus has formed one of the oldest summer stock companies in America, now in its twenty-sixth season, which is made up of the country's leading actors and actresses who for a nominal salary put on their Broadway successes six times a week. Mixing work with play they bring to Maine some of the leading successes of the New York stage, which "first nighters" would fight to pay $10 to see.

The Lakewood stock company has attracted the attention of New York's leading producers and has centered the eyes of the theatrical profession upon Maine.

Many of these have become permanent summer residents of the Pine Tree State.

The Lakewood theater, located on the Quebec Highway, draws its audience from a radius of a hundred miles.

Arthur Byron, whom New York sees year after year, heads this season's company. Howard Lindsay, who staged "The Poor Nut," "Dulcy," "To the Ladies" and others, is the director. The entire company is composed of well known metropolitan actors.

The company plays, "as cast."

You can see Arthur Byron in his famous role in "The Boomarang."

Owen Davis, one of whose plays has been "tried out" at Lakewood this summer, joined with Hugh Ford in declaring the play could or better acted, Eris Dressler played the lead in this play and Arthur Byron a minor part.

The theater is a workshop for Howard Lindsay and after he decided that Albert Hackett, who played the juvenile roles last season, was as good a young actor as we have today, he wrote a play for himself called "Tommy Helps Himself." Another play of Lindsay's, "The Trouble Hunter," is included on the summer program.

Lakewood has become a mecca for the playwright. The earliest to discover it was John B. Hymer, co-author with Samuel Shipman in "East is East," and with LeRoy Clemons in "Aloma of the South Seas" and "Alas the Deacon."

Among others to gather at the summer resort are Kilbourne Gordon, Winchell Smith, Samuel Wallach, William Harris, Jr., Anne Morrison, S. K. Lauren, Roy Briant, Mae Sabelle Croy, Rollin Kirby, cartoonist and Oswald Herring, architect.

KEMP'S "Everything Musical"

SCIENTIST BRAVES PERILS OF DEEP TO PHOTOGRAPH LIFE WITH NEW DEVICE

BY ISRAEL KLEIN Science Editor, NEA Service

The mollusk, or shellfish, is the favorite study of Dr. Paul Bartsch, curator in the U. S. National Museum under the Smithsonian Institution at Washington.

The queer marine animals have led to Dr. Bartsch's being responsible for the invention of a new kind of movie camera, one that can be operated under water.

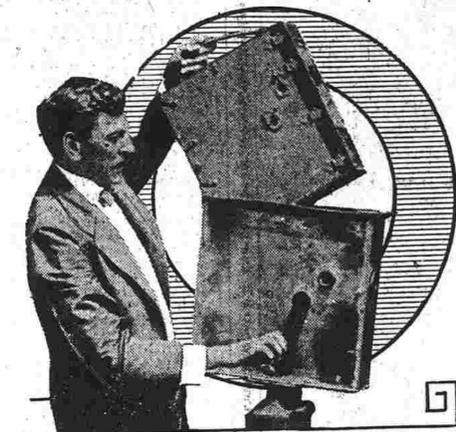

And the mollusks, in addition, may develop Dr. Bartsch into one of the world's most daring divers. The test of the camera and of Dr. Bartsch's daredevilry is to be made soon at the Marine Biological Station of the Carnegie Institution at the Tortugas, small islands north of Haiti.

Wears Only Helmet
There, Dr. Bartsch will cover his body with olive oil, don only a diver's helmet and drop to the bottom of the sea with his new camera to portray sea life in films. Risk of the cumbersome diver's apparel he will be able to move about more freely.

The water at the depth to which he will descend is very cold and would produce violent chills unless some sort of protection was provided. This protection is furnished by the coat of olive oil which will allow him to stay under water as long as five or six hours. Air will be pumped to him from a launch above.

In this war, he has worked as deep as 35 feet below the surface. Among the ordinarily works in a depth of 10 or 12 feet.

Disclose Secrets
Dr. Bartsch used a small camera in 1922 which couldn't be focused for fear of water leakage. The swaying of his body by the water currents, while he held the camera, induced sea-sickness in the audience that watched the film on the screen.

As a result Dr. Bartsch directed the construction of the new camera, which carries 400 feet of film, can be cranked by hand and so regulated as to speed, and can be focused. It is also set up on a tripod for steadiness and can be tilted or turned for panoramic views.

Through this camera Dr. Bartsch expects to reveal more intimately the life of the sea, what groups of marine animals and plants gather together and under what conditions.

The sea carries the secret of existence, scientists believe, from the earliest form of life to the latest.

Here may be found perhaps the only link between animal and plant life—an animal with roots in the ground but depending on food floating to it through the water.

Here, more significantly, may be seen practically all stages of evolution in living animal form, up to the point where sea life joins that of the land. The single-cell amoeba still creeps along the bottom of the ocean bed, feeding on whatever tiny particle comes in its way, and being devoured alike by the larger animals above it.

The grasshopper is the violinist of the ensemble. Its forewings constitute the bows, the legs the strings.

WISHING

Why is it, no matter how much you may own, you always are wishing for more? From childhood way up to the time that you're grown, you wish you could add to your store. It's habit, I guess, and we all brink, but you get just what's comin' you. Consider, for instance, a thing that you crave. The thought of possession's a riot. But shucks, you just wish, 'stead of workin' to save the money that's needed to buy it. You'll find, after all, if you play the game thus, a lot of your wishes go bad. Try earning the things that create such a fuss. If you don't—well, you'll wish that you had.

Some butterflies have no mouths and take no food whatever during their brief lives.

Finley is now with the photographic expedition which NEA Service, Inc., and the American Nature Association have sent to Alaskan waters to make pictures there.

GARMENT FASHION CENTER

Out of an avalanche of books let loose upon a given date in August, as if by prearrangement of the publishers, the following seem to us of particular importance:

The Time of Man (Viking Press) by Elizabeth Madox Roberts—In which "poor whites" are made rich by golden prose.

Nigger Heaven (Knopf), by Carl Van Vechten—More Lulu Belles letta, or much ado about Harlem, N. Y.

Ways of Escape (Little, Brown), by Noel Forrest—The prodigal father with the fattest calf and forgiveness.

Show Boat (Doubleday, Page), by Edna Ferber—Floating down the Mississippi on the good ship "Cherry Blossoms," with "Easty Yynne" and "Uncle Tom" on Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

Hot Saturdays (Knopf) by Harvey Ferguson—A small town girl concludes she may as well have the name as the game.

Short Turns (Century), by Barry Benefield—So good that we fear it may die young. Adds the too-little-known name of Benefield to the list of such as Sherwood Anderson, Willa Cather, Ruth Suckow.

At so early a date we venture timidly to invite the attention of the Pulitzer prize board to "The Time of Man."

Elizabeth Madox Roberts is a new name. We are told she has been writing verse out in California, and before that time, spent many years in Kentucky. She would have had to, to catch so vividly the types, talks and lives of those folk known as "poor whites" and "hill bilkees."

So many writers of the soil have been referred to as "wearing the cloak of Knut Hamsun" or "akin to Hardy's Wessex folk" that such allusions have long since lost their quality. Yet none, it seems to us, has merited the comparisons so much as the writer of this first novel.

Miss Roberts has caught the utter simplicity of these plodding, ignorant back country people and never lets go. Not for a moment does her hand slip from their reality. The hard earth gives before the primitive methods of their sturdy men and equally sturdy women. The young couples are thrown together by the circumstances, couple off and bear their families and go on with the soil struggle.

The story is told about the person of Ellen Chess, whose unusual sensitivity alone makes possible the recording of the extremely minor dramas of the countryside. And though quite inarticulate, she gropes for meanings and answers, few of which are granted her. Miss Roberts' handling of this character is exceptionally good. It is almost impossible to outline the plot for the events share the commonplaceness of the scene. It seems to us among the most sincere depictions of the American peasantry.

The mere announcement of a new Edna Ferber book assures a large and immediate following.

Whatever adverse criticisms rise to mind in considering "Show Boat," they are balanced by gratitude to the author for ringing up the curtains on a scene almost completely overlooked heretofore, and possessing the rarest of romantic flavors.

Her story concerns the people of one of the gold and white show-boats that piled up the river, bringing to the river folk the one contact with glamour. No "gay white way" ever carried half the thrill of the flaring herosene torches.

Miss Ferber has put loads of detail and color into those phases of the story dealing with the show-boat life. It is with the story itself and her handling that we take issue. There are sections where it grows so jumbled as to become confusing. From the river she leaps to the gamblers' days of Chicago, and again furnishes a wealth of detail, jumping again to Broadway and the present.

And there, it seems, the writer "flops" hardest. She cannot so much as overlook the opportunity of ringing in the names of her theatrical and columnist friends—a far cry from the sincerity of her beginning. Perhaps the best work of the book is in her first chapter, which introduces most of the major characters—the acidulous and Puritan Parthena Hawkes who has wed Andy, the river boat skipper, and been plunged against her will into the show business. Magnolia, who has grown up on a show barge and married Ravenal, a river gambler.

Their fortunes drift Magnolia and Ravenal to Chicago. There he turns theatrical professional gambler, and their tides go up and down. Finally he leaves with her baby, Kim. Kim becomes a Broadway star and Parthena dies, still guiding the show boat's destiny, and with quite a fortune made from it. A very uneven book it is.

POE'S STORIES: The Purloined Letter (4)

About a month later the prefect again came to Dupin. He was indeed worried. The reward for the letter had been doubled. He had used every means known to the police and had failed. "I would willingly give my check for fifty thousand francs to any one who could obtain for me that letter," he said in desperation.

"In that case," replied Dupin, "you may as well draw me a check for the amount. When you have signed it I will hand you the letter!"

Even Dupin's friend was astounded. The prefect appeared absolutely thunder-stricken. His very eyes appeared to pop out of their sockets.

Dupin handed the astonished prefect a check book and a pen. With trembling hands the official signed a check for the amount requested. Dupin then unlocked an escritoire, took out a letter and handed it to the prefect. With a whoop of joy the officer clutched the document and ran from the room. (Continued.)

Marvel-Killer

Emanuel Silberstein, 19, former child prodigy and a brilliant intellectual, killed his friend and the companion of his studies, J. H. Calisch, 63, by striking him with a hammer in a Brooklyn restaurant. They had had an argument over psychological theory, and the youth said the man had dominated his thinking. Silberstein's sanity will be tested. The murder is uncommonly suggestive of the Leopold and Loeb case.

QUEER QUIRKS OF NATURE

By AUSTIN H. CLARK
Smithsonian Institution

Father always takes entire care of the children in the sea-horses. In the true sea-horses the eggs are placed in a sack on the under side of the tail of the male in which they are hatched.

In other sea-horses the eggs are embedded in the soft and thickened skin of the under side either of the body or of the tail.

Few fishes are more curious and interesting than the sea-horses. They are found abundantly in suitable localities in all warm seas, and with us reach as far northward as southern Massachusetts, though they are not common beyond New York.

They are common in the Mediterranean, which accounts for the frequent references to them by the Greeks and Romans.

There are about 50 kinds of sea-horses, most of which are rather small, from two inches to about a foot in length; but in the eastern Pacific from China to Australia there are some nearly two feet long. These however, resemble pipe-fishes rather than sea-horses. Some sea-horses are more or less ornamented with skinny flaps and filaments which in some Australian kinds are so developed that they look more like bunches of seaweeds than like fishes.

Sea-horses are very feeble swimmers. They progress very slowly in a more or less upright position by rapidly undulating the little fin upon the back. But most of the time they remain attached to seaweeds or to corals or other growths by the coiled tail.

The privet-hawk moth increases its original weight 72,000 times during its 22 days of feeding.

BOLTING

Republicans who have permitted the intoxication of dry fanaticism to muddle their political sense of proportion will do well to listen to the words of Elihu Root. In a letter of regret at his inability to attend a dinner to Senator Wadsworth, the revered Republican leader said: "Not long before his death Thomas R. Marshall, the Democratic vice-president who for eight years presided over the United States Senate, was asked in a group of friends who, in his opinion, was the most useful member of the Senate. He thought for a moment and replied, 'Senator Wadsworth of New York.'"

"I think that is a general opinion among those who know best. Senator Wadsworth does his part in the government of the country with conspicuous ability and thoroughness. His character is a powerful influence in favor of right and wise conduct. Governing a great country is a serious and difficult business and it requires men of special qualities to do it well. Those of us who sincerely care for our country will be anxious to keep this most competent and faithful man in its service."

This is the point of view of a man whose long life and tremendous public service have told him that nothing is more important to the happiness or safety of a nation than the most meticulous care in the choice of its law makers. On the opposite hand we have a group of Republicans not, at best, endowed with the vision of an Elihu Root nor possessed of his sense of responsibility, whose only thought is to prevent the re-election of Senator Wadsworth and to substitute for him, if possible, in one of New York's Senate seats, a person incomparably inferior in every quality of statesmanship—simply because Wadsworth refuses to conform to the utterly visionary platform of the dregs and because the other person has no other platform to conform to, no responsibilities or appreciation of the seriousness of government to prevent his concentrating on the single-track purpose of prohibition enforcement.

In New York, dry Republicans who are too few in numbers to control the policies of their party are planning to defeat Wadsworth—not, surely in the remotest hope of electing their own bolt candidate, but with a very fair chance of electing an obstructive Democrat, and probably a Tammany Democrat, in the place of the senator most valuable to the people of the country. If government is the serious business that Elihu Root conceives it to be, then any Republican who casts any general considerations of government and helps to destroy the organization of his party by bolting to candidates devoted exclusively to the cause of prohibition is assisting in the utter demoralization of the whole scheme of government so painstakingly builded and successfully operated by the Republican party.

It is an effort to destroy a ton of good in order to secure a problematical ounce. Those who care for their country or their state more than they care for their own little prejudices will not do this.

WHAT'S MINE'S MINE

A Stratford man, unconvinced by a superior court decision that municipalities have any right to establish "zoning" laws and restrict or stipulate the types of structures that an individual may or may not erect on his own land, has carried to the supreme court a case in which he was denied a permit for a gasoline station. It is just as well that this Stratford person feels disposed to spend his money in order to get a direct opinion of the supreme court on the zoning laws.

Anticipation of a court decision is, of course, impossible. It is, besides, deemed improper. But it is either impossible or improper to consider at large and in general the attitude of those somewhat numerous persons who fly into indignant rages over any effort of society to restrict their use, in any way they see fit, of their own property. The principle of "What's mine is mine" is accepted at face value by a good many people—and made the keystone of their moral system—without any consideration whatever of its merits. As a matter of fact no man owns anything by virtue of his own strength. What he possesses he holds not only by consent of society but through the protection of society. Without that protection he could retain nothing for a day, because superior force and numbers would deprive him of it. No one man could defend his possessions against the world. What he owns he owns by grace of human organization.

This is, on a single moment's reflection, utterly obvious. And yet there are thousands of persons who live out their lives without the slightest realization of it. They have no faintest glimmer of suspicion that they owe any debt to society for the things they own. To such people it is beyond conception that the society which gives them everything has either the right or the power to demand something in return. Yet the one condition carries the other with it.

Government, the organization of human life, is a much bigger and more important thing than the impulses, motives or purposes of a single individual. It behooves the individual not to unduly elevate his little personal interests above the interests of society at large, even in the administration of what he is so cock-sure is "his own." Otherwise the power that protects him in possession may demonstrate itself as a power to dispossess.

In the adoption of municipal zoning laws society merely declares a modification, in small degree, of its voluntary guarantee to the individual of his right of possession. It says to him: "We alone make it desirable for you to own at all. We declare that you shall not employ your ownership to offend and damage us in this particular way. We can withdraw our protection of our ownership if necessary. We, not you, are in the position to command."

LESSON

The victory of Senator Shortridge in the Republican primaries of California is practically a culmination of the long gathering protest of the party in that state against the personal statesmanship of Senator Hiram Johnson. Johnson's utter disloyalty to President Coolidge and to any and every principle or project that does not make for his individual conspicuousness has earned him this repudiation, and California has administered it with unsparring hand. The most favored of favorite sons of the state of the Golden Gate has been taught that there are limits to the patience of even the most dotting parents.

A great deal has been made, by the enemies of the World Court, of the defeat of several senatorial candidates whose votes were cast for American adherence to the Court. It has been represented that there was a great upheaval in the country against the action of adherence, and the circumstances of these several defeats has been touted as proof of the discontent. It is probably true, nevertheless, that in no case, until this fight of Johnson's against Shortridge, has the World Court been a ponderable issue. Instance the case of Senator McKinley of Illinois. The country has been made familiar with the ramifications of the Illinois political situation and knows perfectly well how much figure the World Court or any other international or national issue cuts with such politicians as Big Bill Thompson.

But in California the World Court was actually an issue—made so by Johnson. And California Republicans have expressed themselves thereon in unmistakable terms.

There will probably be experienced, in the light of this reaction, a sudden shrinkage in the volume of hullabaloo against the court. Even Borah may find food for thought in California.

TAX STEALING

That the human equation cannot well be eliminated from the business of handling public funds by any safeguards of law alone seems to be indicated in the case of Tax Collector Hamilton of Enfield, whose shortage is now believed to be in excess of $60,000. The state exercises probably as close a watch on the operations of tax collectors as is practicable. The law provides for strict accounting. But if the people and the other officials of a community throw off every sense of responsibility in their relations with the tax gatherer and make no attempt to hold him to compliance with the law, then it is practically impossible to prevent such things as the Enfield defalcation from happening. A town which entrusts the collection of taxes to a person who is dishonest or weak or incompetent, and then does nothing to see that he complies with the requirements of the law in the keeping of his accounts, is a partner in his crime if he turns out presently to be a defaulter. It cannot be protected from itself by any known device of state supervision of taxation so long as the system of town self government continues—as it is to be hoped it always will continue in Connecticut.

RESERVATIONS

The suggestion of the Swedish delegate to the law conference of nations considering the United States reservations to the World Court protocol, that the reservations be accepted with reservations, is not only ingenious but logical. There is absolutely no reason why the signatories should not designate their understanding of article 5 of the reservations as "that the United States shall not claim an interest in any dispute proposed to be referred for an advisory opinion unless one-half the signatories agree that that interest is valid" or something similar. Nobody has a monopoly on this principle of reservations, unless it be the devil.

It is to be hoped that some day, when there is a codification of international law, the first item shall read: "There shall be no acceptance of any international compact with reservations."

IN NEW YORK

New York, Sept. 3.—Scattered notes from a ramble about Manhattan.

One of the big public playgrounds on the East Side... How race and tongue disappears in the ardor of play... Here, perhaps, internationalists might find the solution of their problems... No questions here of creed or color or caste... Brown skins and black skins and white in the glorious unprejudice of playtime...

Two venerable patriarchs stand with noses almost pressed against the wire network of a basketball court... They wear alpaca coats, ill-fitting and shining like a dirty mirror... One has a skull cap, the other a stained derby...

This is a puzzling scene for patriarchs of another land... They stand and shake their heads... Inside the wired arena is a deafening hub-bub... Voices from a chaotic chorus... The old men say nothing... They merely shake their heads... When they were boys their young strength went into toll... Children worked in sweat shops and earned money when they came to America... Young should've went to push-carts... But, now young muscles harden at play... Young hearts stay young and don't grow old at 14... Young voices know no restraints... New bodies being created out of old bloods... And the old men cannot understand... Their beards shake with the motions of their heads... They go away mumbling in a strange tongue...

The treasure-hold of the Federal Reserve Bank... In its vaults are billions, all in gold bullion... Times do not change where gold is concerned... Vaults and caves remain the hiding place even as in the day, when pirates buried their pieces of eights and kings had their treasure vaults under the cellars... The cavern of Uncle Sam's gold cache lies 50 feet below water level, in the very bowels of Manhattan... They do not trust ordinary depths... Imaginative and adventurous cracksmen might find a way of tunneling... What a spectacular crime that would be... Men boring under the city's crust to this vast treasure trove...

Even though billions are insured against tunnelers... A concrete wall, ten feet thick, is all about the vault... Steel bars lattice the concrete... Add to this an electric system that betrays the eavesdropper... Add to this a four-foot corridor around the walls... Add to this a mirror at each turning so that the guards may stand anywhere in the corridor and see every movement of another person... Add to this a main door, of toughest steel, five feet in thickness... Twelve locks must be manipulated before the doors open... Still they are distrustful... Man is a very cunning animal.

Stewart's WASHINGTON LETTERS

BY CHARLES P. STEWART

Washington, Sept. 3.—So many brickbats are thrown at the government that it's a shame to withhold a bouquet when one seems to be indicated.

The Justice Department, then, did a mighty good piece of work when it sat on Gen. Enrique Estrada's scheme to lead a filibustering expedition into Lower California from this side of the Mexican border.

Filibustering has cost the United States lots of trouble in the past. The filibusters' motive may be good—though generally they're purely mercenary—but, at best, they're too utterly irresponsible.

A country, at peace with this one, attacked from here, has a right to complain.

No military movement of any consequence can be organized very secretly. If Estrada had succeeded in launching one from American soil against Mexico, President Calles would have been justified in suspecting the United States had winked at it.

Mexican-American relations are plenty delicate enough now, without any such additional strain.

Any by-night little bunch of filibusters who try to put in and complicate matters deserves a good spanking, the Justice Department holds.

Primarily, officials of the department remark, filibustering brought on the Mexican War.

Aaron Burr originally planned it, in 1806-7, but was headed off.

However, as colonists, other filibusters kept it up until finally there was a class, and the United States won an empire in the west and southwest.

If it's admitted it was a filibuster, it was the biggest one in history.

Perhaps it was all for the best in the end, but should a few men be permitted to make up a whole nation's mind as to what's best, when it involves as important a question as war?

The Justice Department regards William Walker as the premier filibuster.

His ideas weren't as magnificent as Burr's but he succeeded—temporarily—where Burr failed. Walker actually grabbed Nicaragua and was recognized by President Pierce in 1855. Then an American company with interests in the country, which didn't like some of his methods, out-filibustered him and he was deposed.

It would have been better for his health if he'd retired permanently then and there.

Instead he tried again three times, was stopped twice by the federal government, but succeeded in landing in Honduras on his third attempt in 1860.

That time he faced a firing squad.

Filibustering between the United States and Cuba flourished from 1850 until 1898. The blowing of the Maine started the Spanish-American War, but, if so much filibustering hadn't preceded it, the Maine might not have been blown up.

Gen. Estrada's expedition was a small affair, but army men say it might have gained control of Lower California, where Mexico's forces are weak.

Intrenched there, in the present critical situation south of the Rio Grande, there's no knowing, they say at the State Department, the extent of the disturbance it might have kicked up.

The Justice Department squealed if it got started, and its bouquet is well deserved.

Never wait for the applause unless you can give an encore.

SCORES CATHOLICS IN ADDRESS HERE

Westerly R. I. Minister Says Mexican Government Did Right in Expelling Priests

One hundred persons went around to Orange hall last evening expecting to hear the truth about Mexico and were disappointed because Rev. O. C. Brese, the speaker said very little about the republic to the south of us. He said he had never been to Mexico but that he could read between the lines from the news that came from Mexico and his understanding of the situation was that the Roman Catholic church was trying to run things down there and were angry now because the government was going to run its own business.

Took No Notes
As soon as the reporter was seated he was requested not to take notes so whatever is written is from memory.

Rev. Brese hails from Westerly, R. I. and he plunged into a tirade against the public schools of Providence. He said that 90 per cent of the teachers in the public schools of that city were Roman Catholics. He quoted figures of other cities in New England and said that yearly the number of Catholic teachers in our public schools is increasing. He also rapped the parochial schools. He said that every child should be sent to a public school and then get whatever religion he wished after public school hours.

Raps Relics
Then the speaker switched to Rome. He spoke of the superstition of the Catholics who go to Rome. He said there were two skulls of St. Paul shown and thousands of nails from the true cross and other fakes but the Catholics believed they were relics. He then said that of all those who went to visit the Pope, only one was a true enough American to refuse to kneel down before the Pope.

Al Smith and Governor James Walker also came in for their share. Although the literature was distributed at the start of the meeting there was no reference to the Klan except indirectly when Rev. Brese said:

"Neither Al Smith nor Jimmy Walker will ever get into the White House because we Protestants are banded together to keep them or any other Catholic out of the presidential chair."

In his speech of an hour, Rev. Brese advised his hearers to unite and awaken to the danger of Catholicism. He said that the parochial school was the basis of the Catholic strength as they teach their children implicit obedience to the commands of the church and when they graduate they are easily led by the priests.

"They ask us to be broadminded?" he shouted. "All right. If they allow us to put Masons in their parochial school dressed in full Masonic regalia to teach their children we will allow them to have their nuns teach in our public schools."

Spanish Inquisition
The speaker then went back to the Spanish Inquisition and described the horrors of the torture chamber in great detail.

"It is true that the Protestants made mistakes in years gone by but they admitted them but I have still to hear a Catholic who will admit that the Spanish Inquisition was wrong."

Rev. Brese devoted the major portion of his address to the immigration question. He quoted figures showing that from the Protestant countries the percentage of illiterates was the lowest. The Scandinavians ranked first, the Scotch second and the English third. The so-called Catholic countries showed the greatest number of illiterates which proved, according to the speaker, that it is the aim of the Catholic church to keep its members ignorant.

Government is Right
"The government is right in making the Catholics keep out of politics in Mexico. When once they get in power, beware. We must watch here also so that they do not get in power. They are working daily and they are organized. There are over 400 organizations of the Catholic church with chapters all over the United States."

working daily to further the interests of the Catholic church.
"The Catholic church says that any marriage not performed by a Catholic priest is no marriage at all. I defy the Catholic church to say that I am not legally married because I was not married by a priest."
Although not as fiery as other speakers on this subject, Rev. Brese was well applauded throughout his speech and at its conclusion.

Most Beautiful Child

American mothers won't agree. But a group of judges at a Paris contest decided that this little boy was the "most beautiful child." He is Philippe Dubois, son of a wealthy Parisian manufacturer.

Bronner Writes About Filthy Lucre, Yankee Tourists and Honesty

By MILTON BRONNER.

London, Sept. 3.—"Yankee money is dirty money." I thought he was slammimg my country. Americans are not so popular on this side of the ocean these days, especially since English, French and Italian papers are agitating about how we make them pay their war debts. So it seems to me this paying teller in the bank was taking a poke at us. But he wasn't. He was simply stating a fact. He was referring to the various occasions when American paper money is handed in at the bank. Usually it is dirty and sloppy and old as dirty as much of the paper money of France and Italy. Now in England it is difficult. Go to a bank and cash a check for 10 pounds, and nine times out of 10 the paying teller will hand out 10 crisp new notes which have never been in circulation before. The English simply don't like to handle dirty, germ-carrying notes. The banks recognize this and they are willing to go to a little trouble and expense to humor their customers. American banks could do the same thing, but they won't. They are too lazy or too stingy or too indifferent.

Londoners are chortling with glee. In past years the American visitor to the old world has either given London the go-by or else has given it the once-over for about three days and then departed for that dear Paris where the flesh-pots are more attractive and the wine much cheaper.

But within the past few weeks things have suddenly changed. What with the old franc dancing all around the block, getting cheaper and cheaper all the time in the world's exchanges, what with many changes in the government and with mounting prices, the temper of the Paris public has suddenly gone sour.

Looking around for scape-goat for their troubles, they have found less Yankees. Americans have been booted in Montparnasse. They have been scowled at even in the Rue de la Paix.

The result is that many of the more timid souls have cut short their Paris visit and have come over to London where the Britisher may not be particularly keen on us, but where the natives know better how to mask their inner feelings and go after our almighty dollars.

Over here a well-known way of reserving a seat in a railway carriage is to put some object on the seat—a newspaper, a valise, an umbrella, anything. The British are so honest and so regardful of other people's rights that not only is the seat safe, but so is the article.

But the other day, just a few minutes before a train for Dover was due to depart, an Englishman got into a compartment. All the seats were occupied but one. The passenger was missing but there were two valises on the empty seat.

"Is this seat occupied?" The man in the corner seat on the other side replied that it was. A friend of his had reserved it. The friend was in the station refreshment room.

The man was lying. The valises were his own. Directly the train started to move out. Without a word the Englishman tossed the valises out of the window.

"Here what you doin'?" asked the seat hog.

"Oh, your friend has missed this train. It would be too bad to let him lose his luggage."

And that was that.

ROMEO AND JULIET, IN REAL LIFE

Romance of Julia Marlowe and E. H. Sothern Stands Unique Among Stagefolk.

Julia Marlowe and E. H. Sothern.

By VIRGINIA SWAIN

New York.—Footlights and grease paint and papriar mache balconies mean little to E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe, America's best beloved Romeo and Juliet.

Off the stage, as well as on, the love story of Romeo and Juliet, of Hamlet and Ophelia, of Rosalind and Orlando still goes on.

Among the stage romances of America, the Sothern-Marlowe marriage is practically unique. It has survived the strain of long separations, the false glitter and unrest of theatrical life, the jealousies and gossip of the acting world, and—most important—it has weathered 2 years of professional competition.

Still Mutual Friends.

Today, Sothern still insists that Julia Marlowe has the greater gift, and Marlowe declares that it is Sothern who is the genius.

How rare this relationship is among stage folk, the history of innumerable broken marriages among theater celebrities illustrates. Julia Marlowe herself has known the other kind. Her union with Robert Taber ended in 1897 through the professional envy of Taber.

Seven years later, Miss Marlowe found another Romeo, one who did not doff his courtly courtesy with his plumed cap and velvet doublet, whose best compliments were not spoken before the footlights. In 1911, after seven years of co-starring, they were married.

The early life of Julia Marlowe was bleak and difficult enough. Born in the north of England, she came with her parents to America when she was six years old. Her real name was Sarah Frances Frost.

The family settled in Kansas where she attended a country school. Her first stage appearance was in a juvenile company playing "Pinafore" in Kansas City. Her quickness to learn interested the famous actress, Ada Dow, who gave her valuable coaching.

In 1885 at the age of 15 she joined a touring stock company and her first metropolitan success came in Boston two years later. In the role of Parthenia, in "Ingomar" she took the critics captive. This gave her courage to launch a repertory of the classics.

In 1894, she married the juvenile of her company, Robert Taber.

They separated three years later when she had become an established New York favorite, though she still toured extensively.

When Sothern joined forces with her, under the management of Charles Frohman, his reputation in romantic and comic roles added a large contingent of admirers.

In a year or two, the combination stood for the best repertory Shakespeare on the American stage. Yearly tours through the provinces have made them both wealthy and beloved.

Always Had Home.

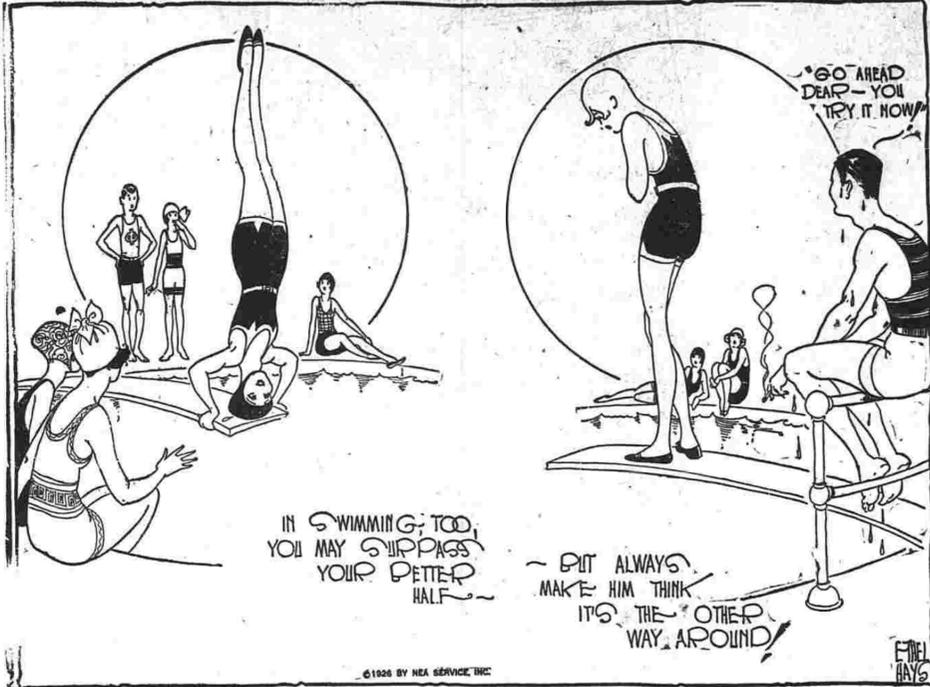

Her husband is voluble on the subject of Julia Marlowe. "When I first saw her," he says, "I thought her the most gracious lady I had ever met. I still think those words most fitly describe her. I have never seen her lose control of manners or mood, in the most nerve-racking crises of the stage.

"When he was married, I determined that the strain of touring should not spoil our family life. Therefore, for many years, we have not lodged in hotels. Whenever our route took us, even if we spent only two or three days in a town, we took a furnished house, installed our own servants and lived a domestic life between performances.

"An agent preceded us, advertising for the house we wanted in the local paper, and then making all arrangements for our occupancy.

"In spite of difficulties, we have always had a home of a sort. I think that may partly account for our happy life together."

How To Keep a Husband

HER OWN WAY

A Story of a Girl of Today. A Change in Plan

I drew Joan Meredith nearer to me along the cushion of the splendid limousine. "Time is a great healer," I said.

"But I miss him so, Judy. I miss him so very much. Oh, I know all about it. I know he wasn't worthy, but I think that makes it even harder to bear. I had so much to give and wasted so much. Perhaps you think I am silly, but it is because you never have said so that I have wanted you to be with me."

"Judy," she said, cuddling closer to me, "I have decided that I do not want to go to Europe right away. I want to stay on here a little while—at least until Leila is out of the hospital. I'd like to watch the little button on Barry Junior's face turn into a nose. It promises to be as interesting as the opening of a rose. Don't you think you can stay a little while longer before we sail?"

She asked this as coaxingly as though it were I instead of herself who had made the plans in the first place.

"Why, of course, my dear, we can stay. You know it is up to you. All I have to do is trail along. All you need to do is call up Jerry and tell him not to get the steamer reservations."

Joan looked relieved.

"At least I really should stay until my brother goes on his expedition, don't you think so, Joan?"

"Well, I know, if he were my brother, I'd certainly stay," I told her, as we got out at the gate of her country home, instead of driving up to the door.

"This was a practice of Joan's and certainly I did not blame her. The whole estate from gate to house spread itself out in one of the most beautiful aspects of nature. The flowers, trees, birds, could not help but put one into a happy frame of mind, even if one had been unhappy at the gateway.

"I'm glad to hear you say that, Judy. You do like John, don't you?"

"I have more than a mere liking for him, Judy," I answered, honestly. "Although I have never met him but for an hour or two this morning I feel as though I had known him all my life."

"Are you falling in love with my poor, dear crippled brother, Judy?"

"I don't consider him crippled," I asserted indignantly. "He doesn't seem so to me. I noticed he was slightly lame, that is all."

DANCE YOUR FAT AWAY, GRANDMOTHER, 65, TELLS THE WORLD

Mrs. Margaret J. Blair, white-haired dancing grandmother, who has found a recipe for health.

Minneapolis. — "Tame your curves by dancing," advises Mrs. Margaret J. Blair, 65, white-haired dancing grandmother, who has reduced her weight from 200 pounds to the proportions of a perfect 36.

"Fat is a crime. Bugles and blobs and rolls of fat are the curse of laziness. Any woman can conquer them."

For 20 years Mrs. Blair was head of the domestic arts department of the University of Minnesota. She gave up this job in order to bring her message of cheer to a waddling world of women.

Made Her Younger.

"Ten years ago," she says, "I was an old woman—a fat old woman. I weighed 200 pounds and had to wriggle out of armchairs.

"Now I weigh 150 and am years younger, not only in feeling but in physical condition. My doctor says I have the heart of a woman of 25, and my oculist says my eyes are ten years younger than when he examined them seven years ago.

"I can walk ten miles a day, dance for two hours without losing my breath, and I never have an ache or pain."

Mrs. Blair's rejuvenation began accidentally. Someone put "The Yankee Shuffle" on the phonograph. In spite of a family prejudice against dancing, Mrs. Blair got up and danced, for the first time in her life. She danced furiously until bedtime, and then got the first full night's sleep in years.

Next morning she decided that dancing—any kind of exercise—would solve her problem.

Today, at 65, she is a youthful, pink-cheeked woman, whose figure and personality many a young girl might envy.

Her Own Rules.

Here are some of the rules she has laid down, through her own experimentation:

"Seek health and happiness through physical exercise and mental serenity.

"Walk correctly and you take years off your age. Women should let their chests carry their bodies, and the shoulders will take care of themselves. American women simply waddle, and the young girls slump. Don't ride in automobiles. Walk!

"Dance your way into joyousness and beauty.

"Stop over-eating, especially sweets. Afternoon teas are ruining physiques. Give your body what it needs, but no more.

"Keep your knees young by exercise and walking. The body's balance largely depends upon supple knees.

"Use your bedroom for your beauty shop. I can do most of my exercises in a space four feet by four.

"Avoid that first visit to the 'stout shop.' It's worse than finding the first gray hair or the first wrinkle, for it shows you are lazy.

"Combine exercises with your housework. Put on a record and do the dust cloth glide around the rooms. Handle your broom and mop with snap, and stand straight over your dishpan. If you haven't a phonograph, hum or sing your own music.

"Work and don't worry. How do I kill worry? I make conditions right if I can. If I can't, I go into my 'dream garden' where I imagine things as I wish they were. Presently they actually are that way. Worry means old age and a double chin."

SOUP CREAM.

Thick soup cream may be used to thin mayonnaise or cream salad dressing. It should be used before it becomes rancid with age.

TO BLEACH LINES.

When the laundress scorches linens or other white material, peroxide may be used as a bleach. It should not be applied to colored cloth.

War Paint vs. Coon Skin

by Olive Roberts Barton.

Behold the Indian! He toils not neither does he fight, yet Chief Sitting Bull in all his glory was not arrayed like this one.

In his beaded belt there is no tomahawk! Lo, instead there is a vanity case. And in the vanity case is rouge, powder, eyebrow pencil and lipstick.

They say it is nature—the primitive in him coming out; That it is the same instinct that caused his forefathers to daub themselves with clays and pigments and hop around a fire to the beat of a tom tom and work up their hats before going to battle.

Certainly it is the primitive in him. When a man wears an orange striped necktie, or a sprigged shirt, or a lavender suit, it is the primitive in him. When he wears a long coon coat and a two inch feather in his chapeau, it is his primitive love of adornment, too.

Behold the gorgeous uniforms of armies, societies, and brass bands. Feathers, gold buttons, much braid, and color!

Men poke fun at women for their love of dress. It is the small boy that follows the band, and it is the small boy who rigs up the garage or woodshed into a circus tent and decorates himself with mustaches, cotton muscles and paint, and displays himself to an admiring public who pay ten pins apiece to get in.

Were it not for conservative tailors who can tell what lengths the male world go. And hark! Speaking of vanity cases, who knows also so but that the obsolete watch pocket may find a new use?

Of course, women love to adorn themselves! They always have. They pride themselves on it. But let men not pretend that away down in the bottom of their hearts they haven't rather a weakness for it, too. Just because the cave man wore a necklace of brontosaurus teeth, he was no less a cave man. And I don't suppose his wives thought him effeminate.

Good Nature and Good Health

CANCER NEEDS QUICK MEDICAL TREATMENT

BY DR. MORRIS FISHBEN

Editor Journal of the American Medical Association and of Hygeia the Health Magazine

Whenever cancer is discussed a prime topic of consideration is the question as to whether or not its incidence is increasing. The present consensus seems to be that there may be more cancer now than there used to be because there are more people living to an older age—and cancer is essentially a disease of older age.

The children that used to die in infancy and the people who used to succumb to typhoid fever, dysentery, tuberculosis and similar complaints now live to an age when they form better soil for the cancerous growth.

According to figures made available by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company there has been no significant increase of deaths from cancer among white women at any age below 65 years. Indeed they report a significant decrease between the ages of 35 and 55.

Extensive Studies

Among insured wage earners and their families between the ages of 65 and 74 there has been an increase of deaths from cancer represented by a figure of 5.2 per 100,000 living. The figures for cancer of the breast in women seem to show a slightly increased incidence and also those for cancer of the intestines.

Five hundred women sufferers with cancer of the breast were studied by Dr. Janet E. Lane-Claydon in Great Britain, to ascertain what, if any, particular circumstances entered into their lives as contrasted with those of five hundred women who did not have cancer.

The investigation showed that unmarried women suffer from cancer of the breast to a greater extent than married ones. It showed also that married women without children were more likely to have cancer than those who had children, but that those who did not nurse their babies at all, or those who nursed them for too long periods of time, were both more likely to have cancer than those who nursed their children for moderate periods.

Must Realize Dangers

This evidence while suggestive is not sufficient on which to base any definite conclusions. It seems, however, to establish the well sustained clinical impression that physical injury of the breast or too prolonged irritation may be related to the occurrence of malignant tumors.

The great majority of women seek aid for cancer of the breast at a period of the disease when it is frequently too late to effect any extensive prolongation of life. They come at a time when the cancer has spread so far that it is not possible to eradicate it completely by operation.

Women must be educated to seek medical treatment on the slightest suspicion of involvement of the breast so that it may be applied while there is still opportunity to save life.

HISTORY OF TELEPHONE IS SHOWN IN PICTURES

State Theater to Exhibit Instructing Group of Films Starting Sunday.

As a part of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the telephone, Manager Sanson has included in the program of the State theatre a series of historical pictures titled "Fifty Years of Telephone Progress" which portrays the events in the early life of the telephone. These pictures will be shown on the first two days of each week, beginning September 5, for four weeks.

The International Centennial Exhibition was held in Philadelphia in the summer of 1876. Exhibits were sent from all over the world and many distinguished guests visited America to attend. Among those who exhibited at Philadelphia was the young Alexander Graham Bell who, only a few short months before, had invented the telephone. Mr. Bell's modest exhibit of a half dozen pioneer instruments was located on a table in an inconspicuous corner near the great Hook and Hastings organ, one of the wonders of the Centennial, on the East Gallery of the Main Building.

Late in the afternoon of Sunday, June 25, 1876, a party of the judges of electrical instruments and instruments of precision, including Professor Joseph Henry, secretary of the Smithsonian Institute, and Sir William Thomson, of England, one of the most famous scientists of that time, accompanied by a number of distinguished visitors, including Dom Pedro, Emperor of Brazil, and the Empress Theresa, passed along the gallery at the end of a long and somewhat tiring tour of the exhibits. With them, though but little noticed, came Alexander Graham Bell.

The party stopped just in front of the great organ. A suggestion to adjourn was offered and agreed upon and the party had started to disband when the Emperor Dom Pedro noticed Mr. Bell whom he met in Boston and in whom he had become interested because of Bell's work with deaf mutes. Instantly, interest was aroused in this young man whom the Emperor was greeting in a friendly way. Mr. Bell explained that he had an exhibit he had hoped the judges would consider. The Emperor asked to see it and was conducted to the small table in the corner where Mr. Bell explained that his invention was a device to "talk by electricity."

He asked the Emperor to try his invention, and showed him how to place the telephone to his ear. Mr. Bell then went to the other end of the wire and talked into a transmitter.

As the Emperor listened the look of incredulity changed to amazement and, slowly taking the telephone from his ear he exclaimed in awe-struck tones, "My God! It talks!"

Quickly the other members of the party took the receiver and listened to Mr. Bell's words coming over the wire.

The significance of the event was not lost to the scientists present, for then and there Bell's invention was accepted as a scientific achievement of tremendous importance to the future. Both Joseph Henry and Sir William Thomson praised Mr. Bell's invention in no uncertain terms, Sir William stating that "It is the most wonderful thing I have seen in America."

This event is portrayed with fidelity to historical accuracy in the motion pictures which also includes the episode in Boston when the telephone spoke the first complete sentence, "Mr. Watson, come here, I want you," pictures of the early exchanges operated by boys and other interesting events in the first fifty years of telephone progress.

These pictures will be shown in addition to the State's regular program.

BIG KIDDIES' REVUE

SCORES A GREAT HIT

Capacity Audience at State See The Children Perform—Do Their Parts Cleverly

(By Staff Correspondent) It was great. That's as simple as it can be said. Without any doubt the Kiddie Revue, which had its premier at the State theatre yesterday, was the best offering the State has presented in a long time. And to think that it was done entirely by children between the ages of three and twelve.

A capacity crowd was on hand last evening to see the youngsters do their stuff, and they did it to the vast satisfaction of the big audience. Every number was applauded heartily, and at the conclusion of the show everyone voiced his whole-hearted approval by applauding for several curtain calls. No one would have thought the kiddies could have presented the high calibre of a performance that they did.

The first act opened in a novel manner. It would hardly be fair, however, to tell just how it was arranged because it would tend to spoil the big surprise in store for everyone who has not yet seen the revue. Let it be said, however, that it held the high quality of the opening number right, through to the final curtain.

The children went through their parts like real professionals. Myrtle Muir, in all her numbers, was wonderful. She sang, danced, and took her part as "Captain" in the highest approved manner. She won the audience to her in her very first number. Following its rendition, amid thunderous applause from the audience, she was presented with a large bouquet of gladioli.

To do justice to everyone else in the revue it would take columns of space. But it must be known that the things that did the youngsters greatest justice was the reception they were given by last night's audience. Dorothy Guest and Dorothy Wirtalla executed a couple of too dance numbers that might well make a professional envious. And the quartet dancing numbers that the Misses Wirtalla, Guest, Fradin, and Ida Wilhelm took part in were very well done. Ada Robinson was well received in two songs and one dance number. Little Betty Foreman made a big hit with the audience when she rendered two song numbers and a colonial dance. She also received a bouquet of flowers following her three numbers.

The number that took the house by storm was the one rendered by little Billy Shea and Dorothy Euricio. They sang and danced so well that they won everyone in the big audience to them. They, too, were each presented with flowers following their numbers and many an encore. Another tiny performer of three years old who ran Billy Shea and Miss Euricio a close second was Baby Custer. All she did was the Charleston, but who would imagine a Charlestonian at three years of age? Baby received a big bouquet after her performance. Joe Excellente, Manchester's junior Charleston champ, sang and Charlestoned to the great delight of the audience and rendered a very clever number in company with Dorothy Wirtalla and Edna Fradin.

The large jazz orchestra under Tommy Trant's leadership was right there with the goods, too. They certainly put across the jazz, and proved themselves not only capable syncopators, but very capable musicians when it came to accompanying the revue when its numbers required orchestral accompaniment.

Much more could and ought to be said about the revue. But everyone in the big audience that attended was more than satisfied with the show, so what more need be said? But just before concluding it should be stated that Jack Sanson, manager of the State theatre, has put a feather in his cap as far as local theatrics are concerned. He personally directed the revue and deserves much praise for the way in which it was executed. He did one fine job—but why say any more when not enough could be said if the whole page were filled up talking about it?

WAPPING

The outlook on the tobacco crop this year seems to be favorable in spite of the early drought. Local tobacco raisers say that the leaves are fully as large if not larger than in the past few years. The growers are harvesting a crop that has not been damaged by hail, wind or frosts so far, and it is getting so late in the season that they are using every possible opportunity to get the tobacco in the sheds. Many are planning to work on Sundays.

Did you ever see Peaches, Pears, and most fruits as low in price as this year?

Just think of Freestone White Peaches selling at 33c for 4 quarts—better include a basket or two with your order.

Does your family like Pears for dessert? Try four quarts of Clapp's Favorite Pears.

We will have fresh Brightwood Pork tomorrow, but it costs more than it should. Lamb, Beef and Poultry are very reasonable.

COLUMBUS SOCIETY GOING TO HARTFORD

Big Day in Hartford For Italians on Oct. 12—To Dedicate Statue

The local Christopher Columbus Society has accepted an invitation to participate in the parade and celebrations to be held in Hartford on Columbus Day, October 12.

The parade will begin at 1:30. Four prizes will be given; one for the best appearance; one for the lodge coming from the farthest distance; two separate prizes of $50 for the most original floats on the discovery of America.

Immediately after the parade a statue of Christopher Columbus will be dedicated in Bushnell Park. Governor Trumbull and all city officials will be present and also the Italian ambassador from Washington. This will be the first celebration of its kind ever held in the state, and the Italians hope that in the near future it will be a legal holiday in Connecticut.

There will be fireworks early in the evening, after which the local lodge will journey to Manchester to attend the dance they are giving in Cheney hall in honor of the day. The music will be furnished by the Peerless orchestra from Williamantic.

SLIGHT AUTO ACCIDENT
A slight automobile accident occurred at Manchester Green Wednesday night at 8 o'clock. Two Hartford motorists figured in the accident. No one was injured. One of the machines was damaged and towed by the Waranoke garage to Hartford today.
