PRESIDENT SPEAKS TO WEST'S EDITORS

Two Hundred of Them Go to Rapid City to Hear Address—Coolidge Still An Ardent Fisherman.

Rapid City, S. D., June 18.—The smaller town editors today assembled at the state game lodge, thirty-two miles from here to pay their respects to President Coolidge. Unable to address the annual convention of the National Editorial Association of Omaha, the President had complied with an invitation to the members to visit him at his summer camp and they came in a special train several hundred strong.

Representing towns of less than 50,000 in mass the great bulk of the nation—the publishers who were entertained at the game lodge today for the most part were from this section. They welcomed Mr. Coolidge to the west and he, in turn, assured them of his complete satisfaction with his surroundings.

Buffalo Barbecue

Prior to the reception at the lodge, the editors were treated to a buffalo barbecue in the dining hall at Galena camp, half a mile up the road from the summer White House. All yesterday and evening there was a great bustle at Galena in connection with the preparation of this rather uncommon delicacy.

Rockville

'BOB' HURLEY GOT START IN TOLLAND

Rockville Recalls His First Investigation In Famous Somers Murder.

(Special to The Herald)

Rockville, June 18.—The reappearance of Robert T. Hurley as the single head of the State Police Department, is of special interest to Rockville people and those of Tolland county.

When Mr. Hurley was first secured as a member of the state police it was not a regular appointment, county officials recall, but was a probation period. The work that he did in the eastern part of the state rested in his being assigned to the investigation work in the William Sherry murder case in Somers, where a woman was murdered and which at first baffled the police.

"Bob" Hurley was the one that made the investigation and presented to State's Attorney Phelps, who was representing the state in this county at that time, a chain work that showed a connecting link and had resulted in the arrest of William Sherry. The grand jury indicted him and his trial was of three weeks' duration.

The arrest was made as a result of a picture found in the house. It had been overlooked by the sheriff and the constables of the county who had worked on the case, but Hurley applying the methods of an investigator saw on the back of the picture the name of the photographer who was then located in Hartford. From the photographer he learned where the proof of the picture had been sent and arrested Sherry on Sheldon street. He was tried and convicted and later hanged, it being the first hanging from Tolland county in a period of eighty years. That was twenty-one years ago, but Hurley's work is still remembered and there are many in Rockville who feel that his appointment will be of much benefit to the smaller towns.

Will Need Light.

Now that the work of the new library for the Superior court of Tolland county is being completed in the south section of the second floor of the Memorial building, it is found that the windows on the south side of the building will be insufficient to furnish light for the library and that in order to use the library lights will have to be burned. It gives to the court of this county considerable more space and although the lighting part is not what was expected there will be installed more powerful lights to give more illumination.

Two Jury Cases.

There are but two jury cases to be heard at this term of the June civil side of the Superior court, which will come in a week from Monday, when Judge Edward Teoman presiding. The two commissioners have drawn the following men to be called for jury duty: Andrew, P. B. Cook, L. Brown; Bolton, Cary B. Carpenter; Columbia, Howard Rice, Frederick L. Greco; Coventry, Charles E. Turner, Jessie R. Lee, Ellingston, Abraham Rosenberg, William J. Hetherington, William O. Seyms, Edward A. Smith; Mansfield, Frank E. Atwood, Henry Dorsey; Somers, Ernest S. Fuller, Horace Pease; Tolland, Henry Bowen, P. P. Ludlow; Stafford, Francis J. Fitzpatrick, Frederick W. Howard; Union, Henry A. Coolidge; Vernon, Frederick Elmselid, Jr., Daniel Greenwood; Willington, Frederick L. Service, Charles Amidon.

Annual Picnic of the Men's Union of the Union Congregational church will be held this afternoon. There will be a parade of the church at 2:30. The usual through the city. A. Sykes, leaving for Vernon Center where the picnic is being held this year. The Vernon Grange will serve the supper.

Overseers' Outing.

The fourth annual outing of the executives, overseers, office workers and the staff of the New York office of the Hockanum Mills company will be held at the Fair Grounds at Vernon, June 25. It is expected that over one hundred will be present. There will be a luncheon at noon at the grounds which will be followed by a program of sports with a dinner at 4:30. The chairman of the committees are as follows: dinner, John Coleman; sports, Fred Ertel; transportation, F. S. Nettleton; refreshments, John P. Cameron; tickets and publicity, Richard Latham; music, D. W. Sykes; guests, C. S. Bottomley; entertainment, A. E. Waite; group photographer, A. E. Profe.

The Union Congregational church Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock. Rev. George Brooks, by request, will speak on "My Trip to the Omaha National Council." The pastor, Rev. Blake Smith, will preside.

The First Evangelical Lutheran Church for station on property of Aaron Cooke on Middle Turnpike East; of Clarence R. Martin for station on his property at 353 Spencer street. No other hearings are scheduled for Monday evening's session and as it will be a special meeting little other business will be transacted.

ABOUT TOWN

Miss Dorothy Anne Hanson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hanson of 2 Hackmatack street, and Garfield Hamilton Keene, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Keene of 695 Keene street will be married this afternoon at four o'clock at the home of the bride's parents. The floral decorations are mountain laurel, pink and white peonies. In the dining room the rainbow colors are used, bluebird cutouts decorating the paper streamers.

The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. Joseph Cooper, pastor of the South Methodist church. The bride will be given in marriage by her father and the double ring service will be used. The bridal party will take their places beside a bank of laurel and evergreens arranged in the living room. The bridal march from Lohengrin will be played by Miss Emily Keene, sister of the bridegroom. Another sister, Mrs. Walter Mitchell will sing "O Promise Me."

The bride will have for her maid of honor, her sister, Miss Frances Hanson, and the best man will be Walter Mitchell.

The bride will be gowned in white, her veil of tulle will fall from a wreath of orange blossoms and she will carry a shower bouquet of bridal roses, pink sweet peas and lilies of the valley.

The maid of honor will be attired in pink georgette, trimmed with pink satin ruffles and lace. She will carry an arm bouquet of pink roses and white sweet peas.

Mrs. Hanson, mother of the bride will wear navy blue Canton crepe and Mrs. Keene, mother of the bridegroom will wear beige Canton crepe.

A large reception for the relatives and friends from Manchester and other places will follow the ceremony.

The wedding gifts are numerous and beautiful. The bride has been the guest of honor at a number of showers given by her associates in various organizations.

The young couple will leave this evening on an unannounced automobile trip, the bride wearing a navy blue ensemble.

They will occupy, on its completion, their new cottage which the bridegroom, who is a carpenter, has under construction on Keene street and will be at home to their friends after September 1.

Both bride and bridegroom are graduates of the local high school. Miss Hanson was also graduated from the Hartford School of Music and is well known as a teacher of the piano.

Clouds travel at enormous heights, "Mare's Tails" for instance, are said at 30,000 feet and higher.

The hand embroidered luncheon set donated by Mrs. James H. McVeigh and Mrs. A. Simpson, for the benefit of the delegates' fund of St. Margaret's church, Daughters of Israel, was worn by Mrs. John Chartier of North Main street.

Go On Bolton Outing

Service and Civic Bodies of North School and Hollister Put in Day at Lake.

Members of the service clubs and the Civic Leagues of the North School street and Hollister street schools of the Eighth district left at 8 o'clock today for Bolton, where the annual picnic of the district for their annual picnic. Thomas Bentley, principal of the Robertson school, was in charge of the affair. Half a dozen teachers and five adults accompanied the students, about 70 in number, went to the lake in automobiles furnished by parents. A camp with facilities for boating and bathing had been engaged and it was expected that the outing would last until 6 o'clock tonight. "Hot dogs" and other eatables were to be cooked.

The students who are enjoying the picnic are those who are members of the service clubs. These clubs are organized for the purpose of keeping up school discipline, helping out in the school organization and doing odd jobs which are given them to take an active part in the school work outside of the classroom.

Must conform. Likewise, in the domain of Christian character there is a fixed and immutable standard, the word of God, which mirrors the life of Jesus. Christians are not left in doubt as to the manner of life they are to live: they are not under the tyrannous and fickle sway of Dame Grundy; "what they say" is not their code of conduct. "He that judgeth me is the Lord." The mind of Christ must master the followers of Christ. "Be ye holy, even as He is holy," Christianity is a character as well as a creed.

Love is life's quest. No one is born into it. Children do not have to be taught to get angry, to be wilful, impatient, jealous, haughty, revengeful, or selfish. These traits, common to the animal kingdom, come by nature. This is what Scripture means when it says that man is conceived altogether in sin. Re- generation, or the second birth, is from the rejection of all that springs up from the self, and the reception of the love that comes down from God. The natural man performs uses and serves the neighbours for the sake of self. The spiritual man, in whom is God's love, serves self for the sake of life.

Happy Holmes Keith's Cor. Main & School Sts. South Manchester "The Place To Buy Furniture"

selfism cannot prevail where these principles are accepted. I envy no mortal, though ever so great. Nor scorn I a wretch for his lowly estate; But what I abhor and esteem as a curse Is poorness of spirit, nor poorness of purse.—Henry Carey.

The time is approaching when no one of us can work in this world any more; and therefore it is tragic for anybody, young or old, to be inching his way along like a centipede, when he ought to be soaring through the year on wings.—Charles E. Jefferson.

A Slogan for Citizens Naturally, any group of people following a manner of life as different from the prevailing fashions as that of the early Christians, must be under suspicion as dangerous citizens. This was the charge brought against Christ, and against his disciples for many generations after Him. This problem therefore engaged the thought of the apostles. Thers it was to show that abstinence from evil deeds, and the practice of holy living, were an asset to the state. By this demonstration Christianity eventually won over the nations.

Old Peter did not have to "discover" sex, after the fashion of some contemporary teachers who are the vague. He knew all about it. His world was a flesh-serving, pagan world. The "abominations of the heathen," as tourists may see them even today at Pompeii or Benares, were always before his eyes. Specially was the sign-manual of paganism: spirituality became the hallmark of Christianity. Peter's teaching, like that of Jesus and of all the other apostles, was perfectly explicit; nobody could follow the New Way and at the same time indulge in the carnality that was common among non-Christians.

Man an' his wife come in from th' country here th' other day. I remembered who they wuz—been talkin' to 'em couple month ago 'bout a oil stove—an' they hadn't bought it either. Said 'twas too much. They knew they cud get one fer $15 from Chicago by mail.

Well, seems they got it—but here they wuz back again. Stove wouldn't work proper—burnt the wicks right out an' they hed t' send to Chicago fer more—'twas a dinky, rickety little contraption anyhow, an' they wuz sick of it an' ready t' do business. I sold 'em a new stove this time, an' all they wuz out wuz $15 they paid fer th' other an' $4.50 fer gettin' it delivered.

Somethin' like this is happenin' right along. Folks sees some mail-order catalog, or some flashy ad with prices way below sea level an' they takes a chance. Er they comes in here t' size things up—an' maybe they sees th' difference, er maybe they says "No—it's too much." An' they finds out t' their sorer that they can't buy somethin' fer nothin', but us'ally they pays somethin' an' gets nothin'.

We cud sell th' same kinda stuff cheaper, if we hed that kinda stuff. But we aims t' have what's right. An' when they tells us 'it's too much,' why they's only one answer. They never wuz nothin' made yet, but what somebody cud make it cheaper an' sell it fer less.

DISTRICT MEETINGS

Of course every last man-jack of us Manchester folk knows that when we hold one of our archaic school district meetings and a handful of taxpayers gather dumbly together and commune, if at all, in whispers and behind hands, leaving the job of running the meeting and the district to one or two or three veterans who may or may not be sorely stricken in years and of fading perceptions, we are neither bossed nor bullied nor deprived of our rights of self-government, nor yet regarded merely as the nominal quorum necessary to make valid the will of whatever gentlemen assume the duty of directing affairs and telling the district what to do.

So that, between ourselves, it is strictly all right to run school district business that way. If sometime it should happen—well-nigh inconceivable of course but still possible—that the volunteer steering committees of one or two or three were to make a mistake about something, either financially or with relation to the perfect fitness of some railroaded election of an official, we can always console ourselves with the reflection that, anyhow, the whole body of the electors, if consulted or permitted to consult together, might have made a worse blunder.

But this disquieting thought intrudes that perhaps, one day, some snooping individual from the outside world may find his way into one of these school district meetings—and then go out and put us in a book or a play—or possibly up before a grand jury. For our ways are not the ways of 1927, nor the ways sanctioned by civic government associations, nor even, perhaps, the ways of the banker or the butcher or the baker in the conduct of ordinary business. And there is always that horrid chance that, sooner or later, somebody is going to find out about us and gallop forth and salute the world with, "Hey, fellers, listen to this one," and spill the beans all over the place. We shrink to think of the wild mirth with which the legend of our methods would be greeted in Kokomo, in Elton and in Grassy Hill.

Wherefore, shall we or shall we not continue to risk being the butt of a million laughs by an uncharitable world?

NEW ENGLAND INDUSTRY. In its report to the New England Council, that body's advertising committee tells of having discovered that, notwithstanding a tendency to speak of New England in terms of one or two of its predominant industries, the products of this section are very largely diversified.

It has been our criticism of the New England Council from its inception that the thoughts of a far from inconsiderable number of its most active members seem to be fairly anchored to these "one or two preponderant industries"—which are preponderant only in a restricted area within something less than an hour's railroad ride from the South or North station in Boston.

It is no more possible to speak of New England in terms of cotton fabrics and shoes, and do any sort of justice to the subject, than it would be to speak of Iowa agriculture in terms of the watermelon crop around Muscatine, Connecticut has but a very minor percentage of interest in cotton and none at all in shoes. She has a tremendous interest in machinery, tools, hardware, silk, woollens, novelties, brass goods and a thousand and one metal products in the fabrication of which scores of thousands of highly skilled and highly paid artisans are engaged.

Yet Connecticut, of course, recognizes that the Massachusetts shoe and textile industries are highly, if locally important. There is no desire, in this state, to minimize that importance. What there is, in this state, is a decided feeling that the New England Council, or any other agency for New England solidarity and mutual aid, to be of substantial usefulness to the whole territory, must adjust its realization and its purposes to the fact that shoes and cotton textiles not only are not all there is to New England industry; but, as a matter of fact, are only a small part of it.

It is gratifying that the Council is beginning to realize that there is a forest beyond the trees.

TWO CONSTITUTIONS. When the old frigate Constitution was hauled into dry dock at the Boston navy yard for rehabilitation, the other day, Secretary Wilbur took occasion to slam radicals and pacifists at the cost of the feelings of the numerous school children who were present on the occasion. Said he:

The condition of the hull of the Constitution, with its rotting timbers and its sagging decks, its rusty bolts and its corroded chains, will teach our children a lesson, for here they will see that, while the Constitution withstood the attack of the enemy ships, it has finally yielded to those microscopic organisms and to those invisible chemical changes which have assailed her in the long period since she was last recon-ditioned.

What could not be accomplished by the shot and shell of the enemy has been effectively accomplished by these corroding influences. So we may say of the Constitution of the United States, symbolized by this great ship that, it has withstood the shot and shell of the enemy nations, it has withstood the giant forces of disruption in the Civil War, but there are invisible forces assailing the Constitution of the United States.

Washington Letter

Washington, June 18.—One of the most fascinating factors of international relations is the spy system.

The giveaway on the great network of espionage maintained by the nations of the world always comes when a spy is caught red-handed. Ordinarily it works very quietly and then, every year or two, evidence of its operations comes to light and one is immediately met with the informed comment—often defensive—that all governments employ spies to gather military and other secrets from other countries.

The latest instance of this followed the British howl of virtuous indignation against Russian espionage. The British presumably found much less than they expected to find in the Arcos raid, and the assumption also is that they would have found more had they suddenly raided the flabbergasted embassy of one or more of the other great powers.

At any rate, Lord George, who knows a great deal about the British government as well as about other European governments, was only one of several who pointed out publicly that all governments spy upon each other and stole each other's documents.

There is no indication that our own government can lay claim to any pious freedom from such tactics. It would be asleep on its feet if it could.

You hear, in confidence, strange yarns about the international spy system as it affects the United States.

Some of the stories probably are not true—but some of them probably are. There is enough evidence even on the surface to indicate that military and naval attaches in world capitals manage the clearing houses for subterranean information bought and otherwise obtained from spies. The likelihood is that they haven't anything much else to do.

It will be recalled that our own military attaché in Mexico City was recently in the limelight when important documents which had passed through his hands were obtained by the Mexican government. A splendid job of international hush-hungry was performed and the incident seemed a turning point in relations between the two countries, but in all fairness it should be said that no official word was ever produced to show that the attaché had done anything that wasn't open and aboveboard.

It was obvious, however, that there had been certain military espionage along the border which seems to have been practiced by both sides.

Some months ago a State Department employe was relieved of his job and it has since been understood that he was connected with a leak to the Mexican embassy here. An argument as to who started the active espionage by the two countries is not likely to get anywhere. Incidentally, there seems to have been a few instances where Americans citizens were suspected of selling out to agents of foreign governments.

Unusual, but rather piquant, was a recent instance where the espionage system was turned loose on the Chilean navy by the Chinese naval and military attaches. This was a matter of domestic politics, for a Chilean general had just set up shop as a military dictator in Santiago and there was some doubt as to the future status of the ambassador here. At any rate, it appears that there was much rifling of pouches, searching of desks and the like, which finally ended when the naval attaché came out the short end and was ordered home!

comet's tail isn't likely to knock down any skyscrapers or even chimneys, let alone annihilating the earth. What we have been nervous about is the possibility that maybe Lindy, seeing that shining bird right handy, might set off in his plane to pin an American flag on it. However, assurance that when it is at its nearest, on June 27, the comet will still be three million five hundred thousand miles away, gives us confidence that the colonel will conclude that he can't carry gas enough for the trip.

By DON E. MOWRY Secretary, the American Community Advertising Association

When two cities of this country raise $1,000,000 each to advertise their resources and assets, it shows that civic boosting is a recognized method of community building.

Atlanta, Ga., is the first city in America to raise a million dollars in one campaign for advertising and publicity purposes.

While this sum is to be paid and expended over a three-year period, it was all pledged in a three-day drive which testifies most eloquently to the civic spirit and enterprise of this metropolis of the south.

They had a smaller campaign in Atlanta, of $250,000, which resulted in bringing in new payrolls worth $4,500,000. Then the next year the new payrolls totaled $7,309,250 annually. Atlanta then took stock. The background looked most promising. Plans were set in the late fall of 1926 to stage a campaign for a million dollars. The goal was reached.

Now comes Detroit with a similar program. Effective advertising copy for the newspapers has been prepared to sell Detroit to Detroiters as the first gun of the plan. Detroit has broadcast all over the country that she, too, will raise an advertising convention and publicity fund of $1,000,000. The Ad-eract Club is working hand in hand with the convention and publicity bureau and a definite program is being worked out.

The economics of advertising, long ago sold to the manufacturers of the country, has taken hold of cities.

show . . . She's a little beauty, too. . . The first time I saw her she was posing for a Greenwich Village art class. . . A pretty, curly haired youngster was playing outside in the street and every now and then a head would poke out the door to see how he was getting along. . . The artist later told me her story.

She had been in a chorus and was rushed by a young man whose father had money. . . The family had objected and he had cut loose to be with her. . . There was a beautiful year. . . But he wasn't accustomed to work and the baby came and they drifted from hard to worse. . . His family refused to do anything about it and eventually she had to go to work. . . She took to modeling. . . One night the husband went to a studio to call for her and found her modeling in the nude. . . He created a ling in the nude. . . He created a ling in the nude. . . He created a ling in the nude.

Not many this season anyway, with hundreds of actors out of work and summer coming on. Of all the professions, the acting profession must put on the bravest front. They must always look their best. And no work in five months but none in sight. Nothing to do but pound the pavement and stand on the corner swapping hard luck stories and trying to borrow a dollar.

Happy endings on Broadway—Bah—!

WATKINS ACHIEVEMENTS

By DON E. MOWRY Secretary, the American Community Advertising Association

When two cities of this country raise $1,000,000 each to advertise their resources and assets, it shows that civic boosting is a recognized method of community building.

Atlanta, Ga., is the first city in America to raise a million dollars in one campaign for advertising and publicity purposes.

While this sum is to be paid and expended over a three-year period, it was all pledged in a three-day drive which testifies most eloquently to the civic spirit and enterprise of this metropolis of the south.

They had a smaller campaign in Atlanta, of $250,000, which resulted in bringing in new payrolls worth $4,500,000. Then the next year the new payrolls totaled $7,309,250 annually. Atlanta then took stock. The background looked most promising. Plans were set in the late fall of 1926 to stage a campaign for a million dollars. The goal was reached.

Now comes Detroit with a similar program. Effective advertising copy for the newspapers has been prepared to sell Detroit to Detroiters as the first gun of the plan. Detroit has broadcast all over the country that she, too, will raise an advertising convention and publicity fund of $1,000,000. The Ad-eract Club is working hand in hand with the convention and publicity bureau and a definite program is being worked out.

The economics of advertising, long ago sold to the manufacturers of the country, has taken hold of cities.

Life On Old Whaling Ships Not All Peaches And Cream

How Would You Like to Start Off on a Little Trip That Took You Four Years to Complete? Judson Cobb, Local Man Tells You About It.

By ALBERT ADDY.

Sailors, so it says in the book, have sweethearts in every port. Probably that is so. But to disprove the statement to some extent this week we come to meet with the example of a sailor, a real deep sea man, who has had the same sweetheart for 46 years. In fact, this man and his wife will observe their 47th wedding anniversary tomorrow.

Judson Cobb, who lives at 25 Division street, was literally born a sailor. He first saw the light of day on the island of Nantucket, and a short time after that saw the sea on whose bosom he was to sail in great white-winged vessels in after years.

Natural for Him
So it came natural to him, this love for the sea, and it is something that has never left him, even though he is in his seventies now and has been off the windjammers for nearly 50 years.

His services to the Yankee whalers and clipper ships, you see, was put in before there were any of the so-called tin kettles, as disgraced sailors call the steamers. Had been placed in operation on the seas.

Four Year Trip
Yankee clippers, crowded with sails to the sea, and it is something that has never left him, even though he is in his seventies now and has been off the windjammers for nearly 50 years.

Well Preserved
Judson Cobb is a small man, scarcely five feet tall. Remarkably well preserved for his age, one would not think that he has passed the allotted three-score and ten years. His gray hair and mustache give him a distinguished look and one would never dream that he had been a sailor.

Little Sailor Talk
Judson Cobb is none of this. He looks the respectable tradesman that he is, and when he talks he talks landsman's English. Once in a while he will say something that smacks of the salty sea but he translates it into ordinary language in a twinkling.

Lived on Decks
"Every minute I could spare I spent at these docks," Mr. Cobb says. "I lived some blocks away from the shore but my mother always knew where to look for me. Down at the docks, by the sea that I had grown to like, that was the place to find me."

Ships on Whaler
It had to be a whaling vessel for Judson Cobb. He shipped out on the Morning Star one fine morning and thus his career, a short but eventful one, began. Whales were the prizes of the sea and fortunes were being realized in the sale of sperm oil. There was no kerosene, electric or gas lights, so whale oil had to do for all three of them.

They were good ships in those days," the old salt says, "although whalers got the reputation of keeping ships that smell like the Schoot street dump. They were staunch and firm, able to carry an enormous amount of sail, and able to withstand any kind of a blow."

"They had to be good to continue to carry on day after day, through gales, hurricanes, tropical storms and whatnot. Our cruises did not allow us to stay in the waters around Greenland and the northern part of the continent. We were a roving people, wandering all over the world in search of our prey."

Out of New Bedford they sailed and headed south, catching a whale or two as they worked down toward the equator, catching more and more of the coast of Brazil, and still a few more before they rounded Cape Horn.

They were headed for better hunting grounds than these, however, and kept their course on up the western coast of South America, up into the Northern Pacific

Parrot Owned by a Local Woman Is Now Nearly Fifty Years Old.

Speaking of the longevity of parrots, Judson Cobb can talk from experience. While whaling off the coast of Africa one year Mr. Cobb captured two gray parrots. One he gave to a person who took poor care of it, and the other he gave to the late Henry Russell. That was back in 1878.

The parrot, Mr. Cobb says, is still living, and has been handed down by Mr. Russell to his daughter, Mrs. William Remig of Pine street, who still has it. The bird, then, is at least 49 years old.

On the Pacific
So out on the Pacific again, headed toward the Fiji Islands. Sperm whales were what they were after, those vicious monsters of the sea, valuable for their oil, their teeth and the bones of the roof of their mouth. Other whales were sighted but few sperm.

It sounds as though it would be a tedious thing, a cruise four years long. It would be to a landsman, but Judson Cobb was no landsman. He had wanted the sea and longed for it, and his love for it never died. He still yearns for the feel of a rolling deck under him, and the call "all hands aloft!" would be music to his ears.

Hard Work
But even after that narrow escape, he still wanted to sail on a merchantman, and he finally landed a berth on a ship going from New York to Glasgow. This one trip finished him with merchantmen, for he had to work too hard. They didn't feed him any more than they had to, and there was always something to do.

So he came back to Manchester, but the old urge was upon him still. His ship's carpenter was living here then also, for both of them had come to Manchester together. He had worked in the mill, but always his mind was far away. The same with the carpenter.

Then one day they both received word that their former captain, who was in Bath, Me., was preparing to take another cruise into the Pacific after sperm whales. The captain, they heard, was anxious to sign up as many of his old crew as he could, so he sent word to the carpenter and Mr. Cobb.

First Steam Whaler
The carpenter went right away but Mr. Cobb's sisters brought pressure to bear on him and he stayed home. The ship in which the cruise was to be made was the Henry and Jane, the first steam whaler ever to go out of port. It was in the process of construction at Bath and would be ready in a short while.

Soon, however, Mr. Cobb, despite the protests and pleas of his family, left Manchester and went to New Bedford, where the cruise was to begin. Then in 1878 the ship set sail, on Mr. Cobb's last cruise. Not a very profitable cruise the first year, for they did not catch one whale until they had been out a year and five days. Imagine cruising all over the Atlantic ocean, as far as Africa, and even into the Indian ocean without even sighting a whale for a year. Well, they would try the Pacific, so around the Horn they went again.

They touched at several places on the way up the coast of South America, putting in provisions, washing their faces, and all together they had a rather good time of it. But no whales.

His Prize Money
It was not until they got up into the Behring sea that their hunting began and then it started in earnest. Judson Cobb says that was the best cruise he had ever been on, and for his share he received $1,300 in gold. He left the ship at San Francisco with several other men, claiming that he had not received enough. The claim was in the court for three years and was finally settled by the owner of the ship for a nominal sum.

That ended his life on the ocean wave. It was short—only 12 years—but it was eventful and crowded with excitement. He tells of a search for the lost James Gordon Bennett expedition which had been sent out to try to find the North Pole. The members of the party were never heard from again and every whaling vessel in the Pacific had put in extra provisions in case the party might be found.

Hope that the men might be alive was soon despaired of, and as the whaling hunting was so good in that section most of the captains disposed of their provisions either to the natives of the Aleutian Islands, or threw the stuff overboard, saving the containers so they could carry more oil.

Catching sperm whales is an exciting pastime, Mr. Cobb says. There is no telling what may happen, for sperm are terrible fighters. Not only do they use their teeth but also their tails and it is a question of which is the worst.

"We went after them in a small boat, harpooning them, then either killing them with lances or firing explosive bombs into their bodies."

These bombs are peculiar contrivances and Mr. Cobb has two of them at home now. They are about a foot long and are cylindrical, coming to a sharp point at the end. Inside the bomb is a percussion cap, which is set off by a time fuse, igniting the charge of powder when the bomb enters the body of the whale. One of these bombs in Mr. Cobb's possession has an arrangement of wires at the end in much the same style as the feathers on an arrow.

How Whales Act
"Some people have asked me how a whale acts when it is harpooned," he says. "And I come back with another question: 'Supposing you were to walk up to a big, husky six-footer and slap him on the back of the neck. How would he act? You don't know until he does. Well, that is the answer to the first question. Nobody knows until he does it.'"

"That's part of the fun of catching whales. There is always that element of uncertainty. For a while may roll toward the boat, swamping it, or may roll away from it, still held by the rope which is attached to the harpoon. Or he may dive under and bite the boat in two. He may, furthermore, give one flip of his great tail and smash the boat to atoms."

"He may look around to see what has hit him, and that gives you an opportunity to sink a lance or a bomb toward the whale. You have completed that the whale is yours."

Asked if he had ever used a harpoon gun, Mr. Cobb answered that more whales are lost than are caught with the first question. Nobody knows until he does it.

Gun Harpoons
"The gun harpoons them all right, but sometimes the rope breaks and the whale flicks his tail and disappears in the sea. With a hand harpoon the rope is always tied to a float, so no matter how far the whale goes the men in the boat can locate him by the buoy."

Then the animal is towed to the side of the ship and the oil, whalebone and teeth taken out. The rest of the whale is discarded, and feeds the sharks that always follow the boats.

Whaling boats were better to sail in than merchant vessels, Mr. Cobb maintains. The weather in the north might be cold and the work rather hard, but they feed the crews well and the shares are doled out after every cruise. It is the only life on the sea for him and his one trial on a trading vessel was enough.

Tough Captains
"We had tough captains on some cruises, and if the men would let the captain there would be no trouble. Boozie was the main cause of any mutinies or outbreaks we had, for no matter what precautions were taken, there was always liquor on the ship."

But captains put down uprisings like this with a heavy hand. They are monarchs of all they survey and are allowed to shoot to kill when a member of the crew becomes insubordinate. I have seen a few outbreaks but the captains were hard boiled and had the thing stopped in a few minutes."

Has Many Curios
Judson Cobb swears an interesting collection of curios picked up on his travels throughout the world. One of the principal exhibits contains three objects, two about as round as baseballs and the other just about twice the size of a banana.

They are teeth of the sperm whale. Polished like ivory, the teeth are very heavy. The biting ends are worn down into almost perfect hemispheres. When sperm whales are young these teeth are pointed, so it can be seen that this particular whale had used his teeth quite a bit before he was killed.

Other objects in the collection are little carved paper cutters and things of that kind, all made from the teeth of the whales, exquisitely fashioned and brought to a high polish. These Mr. Cobb made while idling away the hours on days when there was nothing to do.

Mr. Cobb's chair stands by the window under a picture of his favorite ship, the Henry and Jane. He sits and dreams, and sheepishly confesses that he would like to be back on her again.

MUD RUSH THRILLER IN-SILLS' PICTURE

"Framed" Begins Two-Day Run at State Theater Tomorrow—Two Features Today.

"One of the most thrilling scenes ever transferred to the screen is the flood of mud in which Milton Sills and Natalie Kingstone, stars of 'Framed,' are trapped in a diamond mine. 'Framed' is the feature attraction at the State theater on Sunday and Monday."

Adapted from George Suttton Jr.'s book "The Dawn of My Tomorrow," "Framed" takes place in Brazil, whither the hero has gone after being cashiered out of the French army on a false charge, preferred by the woman he loved. A hater of all women, he comes to offer his life for one of them, even after he has been "framed" a second time. It is during this affair that the famous mud-rush is seen. It charges through the corridors of the diamond mine at terrific speed, enveloping miners one after the other, and threatens to cover up Sills and his leading lady but he picks a hole in the roof of the burrow and manages to escape.

This is undoubtedly Sills' best picture, so it must be a good one. Sills has become one of the most popular of the he-men on the screen lately and every vehicle in which he appears seems to be better than its predecessor. "Framed" is a picture which just fits him, for he is the ideal of the hero visualized by the author of the story.

Tonight will see the last showing of Tom Mix in Zane Grey's "The Last Trail" and "Naughty Nannette," starring Viola Dana. "Nice and wicked" was the tentative title of "Naughty Nannette." This title did not make a hit with the star who thought that it sounded a little too much like "Salva-

PENNSYLVANIA MINES
KILL SEVEN EACH DAY

Harrisburg, Pa.—Seven workmen were killed each day during the first five months of 1927 in the State of Pennsylvania, a report by the State Bureau of Statistics reveals.

Figuring 24 hours a day, twenty-one persons each hour suffered non-fatal injuries during the month of May. Nearly one-half the fatalities and injuries were suffered in the state's anthracite and bituminous coal mines.

There were 173 persons killed in industrial accidents during May, while 12,869 persons were injured during the month.

Former Librarian's Birthday Recalls Institution's History

Mrs. Mary Easton, Now of California, 87 Years Old Tomorrow—Her Husband and Sister Librarians.

By ROBERT E. CARNEY

Tomorrow, June 19, on the Sunny Slopes of California, Mrs. Mary Easton, for many years librarian at the South Manchester Free Library will observe her eighty-seventh birthday, yet across the continent here in Manchester where she taught school and where she served the patrons of the library for years there are still fresh in the memory of many, the kindly ways of Mrs. Easton when she presided over the school room and the thoughts that she and her sister, Miss Elizabeth Cobb, who was later her assistant in the work at the library, gave to the boys and girls of South Manchester, nearly fifty years ago.

Around Mrs. Easton and her husband and later her sister, is much of the history of the South Manchester library, which is antedated only by the incorporation of Manchester, the establishment of the mail service and a few of the older industries.

In the near future there is going to be a new library in South Manchester. That has been provided for already by a vote of the Ninth District and if that is done there will be given a prominent place in the halls of that new building to a picture of George A. Easton, her husband and first librarian, Mrs. Easton and her sister, Miss Elizabeth Cobb.

How It Started. The South Manchester Public Library had its start in a peculiar way. During the early days of Cheney Brothers, about 1850, there was employed in one of the departments of the mill several women among them afterwards becoming Mrs. James Pitkins, Mrs. Rogers, Mrs. Arnold, Emily Cheney and Mrs. James Olcott are some that are best recalled.

Miss Elizabeth Cobb

There was not as much machinery in the mills in those days and it was possible for one of the women workers to read to the others while they worked, they taking their turn in this matter. They were employed in the skinning department. The reading was allowed and it was formulated in the mind of one that a petition be directed to Cheney Brothers for the establishment of a library. The request met with favor and the library was started with 225 books of Harper's family library. The books were kept in Cheney Brothers' office until Cheney Hall was built, when they were removed there and George A. Easton, the husband of Mrs. Mary Easton, who had been born in Nantucket, Mass., but associated herself with the people of South Manchester when everybody knew everybody in South Manchester took charge. As a school teacher she showed the qualities of being able to impart to students the learning that they should have and among those who attended school with Mrs. Easton as a teacher it is recalled that James H. Quinn, Mrs. Lucy Ringrose, Mrs. P. J. Ryan and Mrs. William Burke were her students.

Wells St. Library. Mr. Easton remained in charge of the library until his death in 1876 when Mrs. Easton was appointed. Miss Alice Cheney, a sister of Miss Mary Cheney, Mrs. Farley and Frank Cheney, Jr., became interested in the library work and in 1880 the library on Wells street was opened.

Mrs. Easton continued to teach school and gave her time after school hours to the library, but with the increase in the number of pupils in the South Manchester High School about 1895 and the more central location the work was such that she devoted her entire time to the library and in the evenings was assisted by Miss Cobb, who held a clerical position in the spinning mill of Cheney Brothers, but left that position to devote her whole time to the library. The library building was destroyed in the fire of October 23, 1913.

The interest shown in this work by Miss Alice Cheney, who saw that ample reading matter, including the best in magazines and the daily papers made it a drawing place for the young and old and there was that quietness about the place that one walked on their toe tips as they went from table to table. For the men there were the papers of the day and such magazines as Leslie's Weekly, while the book shelves, located to the right as one entered from the Wells street side contained the richest kind of books for the boys. There were the stories by the English writer Hende, but he lost favor when he started to tell what the English boys had done to Americans in 1777 and he was of little value to them when he emptied the Mississippi into the Pacific ocean.

First Librarian and Teacher Wife

George A. Easton

Clean Hands Required. Mrs. Easton took personal supervision of the delivery and returning of the books and it was a bad afternoon or evening that a boy turned up and looked for a new book or was returning one already loaned if the hands were not clean.

As is the usual boy fashion there was one evening a week put aside for the return of books. They might go on and play ball on their way back to the library, but they were always careful not to add any extra dirt to the paper covered volumes, for all books in those days carried a paper cover. They might reach the corner of Main and Wells street and suddenly one of the boys would recall that their hands might be dirty. There would be a sudden rush to the fountain near the corner of South Main and Hartford road where hands would be washed and sufficient water applied to the head to see that the hair was kept down, if not always combed. The boys knew the rules and they knew that Mrs. Easton when she made a rule intended that it should be kept.

Not only was the rule held by the boys, but also by the girls and even to the grown ups. It is recalled on the afternoon of the fire when the library was burned that most of the books were saved and it was mostly through the direction and the system of keeping the endless chain going that this was accomplished by men who had been boys in Mrs. Easton's time.

Did Not See Fire. Mrs. Easton's term as librarian which started in 1876 continued until 1912, when the sudden death of her sister, Miss Cobb, left her alone in Manchester with the exception of one brother. Her son, William Easton was a mining engineer in Chicago and he had often asked her to make her home with him. Her only other child, Mrs. C. E. Brink was living in Providence. A strike on finances could be seen when she left Manchester in 1912, one year before the library burned and went to Chicago to make her home with her son. Four years ago she came to Manchester to San Francisco, Cal., where she is still living, and tomorrow will observe her eighty-seventh birthday.

By Mr. Easton's wishes gone from Manchester and the greeting her on her arrival from her friends, from her former pupils and from those who were users of the library in the days when Mrs. Easton presided, a new era in the library she has been selected. A set of 225 volumes of the original library has gone to the new building and the first year was 1927. The books are the books given that heavy paper covering, but those who enter the old Eldridge house on Main street, who lived in the days of Mrs. Easton, her sister or her husband, still think of her.

The Future. Until three years ago the entire cost of rent, upkeep and books was paid for by Cheney Brothers, but at an annual meeting of the Ninth School District it was voted to have this cost paid for by the Ninth District, with the stipulation that Cheney Brothers would later provide a new library fitting and providing for extra expansion in the town. The library will be built, probably not next year and perhaps not for five years, but with the passing of time there will be erected upon the corner of Forest and Main streets, the site now occupied by the Army and Navy club, the new library.

It was planned to build a new library in 1913 and in fact if a person's eyes are sharp enough it will be noticed in that new picture of Manchester that there appears a

TOLLAND

The Lawrence family consisting of father, mother and eleven children, all musical, not one of the number but can play at least one musical instrument, one daughter being able to master twenty instruments, gave an entertainment in the Town hall Wednesday evening. Those who were fortunate enough to hear this talented family, were well repaid. Admission was free but a collection was taken which netted a neat sum for the benefit of the Salvation Army.

Miss Sadie Millard of Rockville was a guest Thursday of Miss Julia Young. Miss Thelma Price will leave Saturday for North Carolina where she will remain for several weeks doing Sunday school work.

Miss Enid Morris underwent an operation for appendicitis at the Rockville City hospital Wednesday. Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Loverin and children Robert and Donald of Vernon and Mrs. Doris Brown Luddington of Proctor, Vermont, were guests of relatives Tuesday.

William Ayres, Jr. and L. Ernest Hall were among the number of Grand Jurors who met Monday in Rockville on the Cline case.

Mrs. Kate Taylor has returned to Northampton, Mass., after a short stay here with friends. Among the members who are to graduate in the 1927 class of the Rockville High school from Tolland are Miss Ruth Ayers and Miss Eleanor Luce.

The graduation exercises of the schools of Tolland were held in the Federated church Thursday evening. The program was as follows: Professional Invocation—Rev. William C. Darby Essay: Longfellow and his poem: "The Village Blacksmith"—Grace Kurnial Recitation of the Poem—William Lojzfm Part I of the cantata "The Village Blacksmith"—Kronitz Award of Diplomas C. Hibbard West Award of Prizes

Part II: Conclusion of the cantata Reception of Graduates.

Class of 1927: Ratcliffe Hicks Memorial school: Grace J. Kurnial, Elizabeth Catherine Ott, Harriet

Viola Luce, Siegfried Gilbert, Katherine Zelinka. Cedar Swamp school: Freda Bertha Duell, Woodrow Louis Hall, Donald Clark Gehring, Elizabeth Winifred Reed. Snipscic school: Rosella Susau Miffitt, Abraham Nussdorf. Buff Cap school: Margaret Kurek School No. 7 and 9: William Lojzfm.

HEBRON

Schools of the town officially close on Wednesday of this week, with the exception of one or two schools having time to make up.

Graduation exercises for the pupils completing the work of the eighth grade in the schools of the town were held Wednesday evening at the Congregational church, at 7:30 to 9, standard time. The graduates were Clarkson Lambert, Bailey, Wendell Fermin Deeter, Carl Argentina Enrico, Nettie Epstein, Hyman Robert Frankel, Lillian Louise Jones, Helen Margaret Keefe, Paul Pagach, Howard Edgar Porter, Mabel Louise Porter, Ruth Sherman Raymond, Sarah Sherman, Olga Stanek, Annie Marlon Tennant. Class colors were blue and white and the class motto was "No Success Without Labor." Mrs. W. O. Seys played the march, the Rev. T. D. Martin gave the invocation. The program consisted of recitations by the graduates, choruses by the primary grades. Supervisor Charles M. Larcomb made an address at the beginning of which he announced the news of the safe arrival of the French flyers the tidings having just been received on the radio. This caused a wave of applause. The evening closed with a class dance at the town hall. Presentation of diplomas was by Representative Robert E. Food, chairman of the school board.

The Rev. T. D. Martin was present at an archdeaconry meeting held at Pomfret on Tuesday at the Rectory School. A dinner was served to the clergy by the school chef.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Allyn of Hartford are spending some time at their summer place at Burroughs Hill. The grammar grades and the fourth grade from the Primary room of the Center school enjoyed a picnic on Thursday at Columbia reservoir as the closing of the closing of the school year. It has finally been decided that the suspicious cases in the Center school are whooping cough. The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Porter has the disease. There are several cases among the school children. The disease seems to be of a mild form which was at first difficult to diagnose. The engagement of Miss Marjory Hough, daughter of Mrs. Gertrude Hough, to Morris Keefe was announced at the commencement dance Wednesday evening. Mr. Keefe is a son of the late Dennis Keefe of Andover. Miss Hough is a graduate of the Hartford High school. At the last meeting of the American Legion, G. Merle Jones Post, two new members were taken in, Philip Isham and Fred Tatro both of Columbia. There are now five Columbia members. As there is no active chapter of the legion in Columbia the Hebron Legion are taking over as far as possible the Columbia work. They hope to secure two more members from that town soon. Mr. and Mrs. John Hills who are spending the summer at their country home in the vicinity of the old "Music Vale" Salem, were visitors on Thursday at the home of the Misses Pendleton. Mrs. Anne C. Gilbert and Miss Susan B. Pendleton attended in East Hampton Thursday afternoon the committal service over the remains of the late Frederick Webster Wells who died in California several weeks ago and whose cremated remains were brought to his former home in East Hampton for burial. Miss Florence E. Smith of the Seymour School, West Hartford, and president of the State Teachers' Association, will spend two weeks of her vacation at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin T. Smith. She plans to take a course at a New York summer school later. It has been learned that Wellington Sloan of New Haven will be able to be present and give four lectures on music at St. Peter's school during the last week of its sessions. Mr. Sloan's music course has been one of the particularly attractive features of the school in its past sessions. Owing to other professional engagements it was at first thought that he could not be present and do his usual work in the school.

DANCING AT RAINBOW

Rainbow Dance Palace and Inn on the Willimantic State Road in Bolton is well equipped to offer the dance public what they wish in the line of entertainment and Inn service. The dance palace offers the seven piece Rainbow Colligate Orchestra as the feature attraction under the leadership of William Tasillo, Jr., also a special party attraction every Wednesday; old fashioned dances on Thursdays and a special program of modern dance music every Saturday.

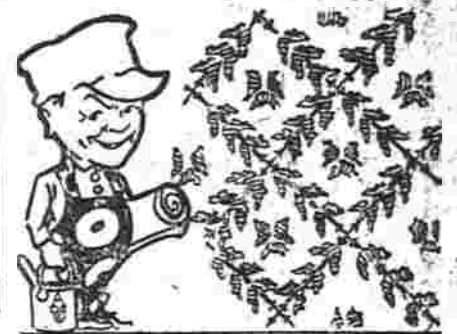

The Inn which is connected with the dance palace has recently installed the latest in musical instruments, so that there will be music at all times for those that take advantage of Mr. Heckler's excellent steak and chicken dinners. Mr. Heckler gives special attention to every party whether it is just a luncheon for a private affair or a banquet or dinner.

PARADOX

The lion tamer was telling of nineteen occasions within three years when he narrowly escaped death from attacks by lions. "But why in heaven's name do you keep at it, then?" a friend asked. "Well, one wants to live."—Lustige Blatter, Berlin.

BALLOON DANCE TONIGHT
Schendel's Serenaders will furnish the music for the Balloon Dance to be conducted by the North Ends at Turn hall tonight. There will be novelties for everyone and prizes for the lucky persons.

One of the features of the dance will be the singing of Corwin Grant, who made such a hit at the recent Community club lawn fete. The Ben Hur Trio will perform as will the Howitzer quartet. A good time and a large crowd are expected.

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE: (9) Sound

Sound travels in waves through the air, through gas or a liquid or solid. The speed of sound through air is about 1100 feet a second. Sound goes through iron much faster. The picture shows how the speeds of sound from a clanging bell compare according to the mediums of earth, steel and water.

Echoes are a common way of testing sound's speed. The sound is reflected back to us from some surface.

Peals of thunder are really the echoing of a single clap of thunder between the clouds and the earth.

The Whispering Gallery in the dome of St. Paul's, London, offers an interesting study of sound. A slight noise travels the circuit of the dome, and reaches the speaker from behind. Here are shown listeners testing sound in the Whispering Gallery.

This is Chapter 60 of the series of articles written by a correspondent for The Herald, who is revisiting France.

CHAPTER LX

The famous Toul Sector is quiet. S. Didelet still runs a cafe and billiard parlor in the Rue de la Republique of Toul and blue-uniformed Pollux march, now and then, through the Metz Gate of the fortifications.

According to a sign in Toul, Nancy is 23, Colombey-les-Belles is 17.5 and Vaucouleurs is 24 kilometers away.

Familiar Shrine

There are seven tall pines in the yard that surrounds the birthplace of Joan of Arc in Domremy. Aimee Girardin, who is 78 years old, still unlocks the door to the house just as she did when thousands of American soldiers made a pilgrimage to the shrine in 1918 and 1919. Vauthon-Haut is that village on the hill and Vauthon-Bas is the village in the valley.

L. Fleuret sells bicyclettes in Gondrecourt. The Ormain river is thick with weeds and ducks dive for bugs in the shallows. Paul Pitelot runs the quincaille here and the monument was erected by public subscription in the villages of Boudigneourt, Demange-aux-Eaux and Tourailles.

Vandeville is the name of a town in this region. And there's another village—"Delouze"—which should have a kick in it for every A. E. F. veteran.

The train from Gondrecourt for Bar-le-Duc leaves at 20:45. The train for Neufchateau leaves earlier, at 13:59.

Angeline Thieret has sold her cafe in Pagny-sur-Meuse and has purchased the Cafe des Halles in Colombey-les-Belles.

Camps Are Gone

That huge air service and dispatch riders' camp at Colombey-les-Belles has disappeared completely. It's a ploughed field now.

Workmen, after these nine years, are now stripping the 10-wire telephone line the Signal Corps erected from Colombey-les-Belles to Neufchateau.

Neufchateau is on the Mouzon river and not far away, on a hill, is the church of St. Eloi in the village of St. Eloi on the steep slope below in the valley is the village of Soulesse, which, in other days, was the Roman town of Solmanaca.

And Leon Nalshu, who used to box with American soldiers in Gondrecourt, has only the blouse to his American uniform left. The breeches were out last year. Something should be done about this.

The famous Toul Sector is quiet.

The WOMAN'S DAY by ALLENE SUMNER

This And That In Feminine Lore

The Women's Medical Association of New York City is behind the proposed Gotham hospital, for the middle class men and women who cannot afford private rooms in the ordinary hospital and would not accept free care in public wards.

"Chik," which I believe is pronounced as if it were spelled chick, is thus defined by one woman noted for her good taste in clothing—"as merely having a feeling for the right costume for a given occasion."

Have any of you mothers, wives or sisters marvelled at the way the laundry for the male members of the family strikes after laundering, regardless of whether it is all or part wool, silk or cotton mixture? Well, a prominent clothier reveals the reason for it and I fully believe him.

To the inquiry how to clean leather oxfords—there are several preparations for doing the work at home, one of which may be found in most of the shoe-shine parlors, or shoe repairers' shops.

For informal entertaining, or luncheons when the weather is warm, served in the garden or shady porch, the salad sandwich is a favorite with the hostess.

The "half-way" is the latest sleeve, which would be the old-fashioned elbowlength sleeve except for its unusual cuts which may be flared, circular, puffed or tight with some odd cuff treatment.

Summer calls for balanced meals. Meat, vegetables and salad call for only fruit for dessert while a full meal can be wholly redeemed by an old-fashioned strawberry shortcake.

Keep sponge cake on hand in summer. With fresh fruit or even preserved fruit and custard or cream a delicious dessert can be made in a minute.

It is often desirable at a reception or large party to serve a tea punch. The recipe below is a good one and will easily serve 50 people: 1-2 gallon strong tea. 1-2 dozen lemons. 3 lbs. sugar, made into syrup. 2 pt. loganberry or raspberry juice. 2 pt. bottles (about 1 pint each) gingerale. 1 quart water.

Quaint grandmother chintzes, linens, voiles, dimities, all washable are the only frocks to choose for the children, for they will be children and get grimy and there is a certain satisfaction in knowing that their clothes will tub perfectly.

For parties even, fine batiste, organdy, voile and imported print dresses are more appropriate for children than chiffons and silk crepes.

Divorce should be made easier and a marriage should be annulled as soon as the parties cannot get along together. This, according to intellectual women leaders of Germany. They say that they advocate quicker and easier divorce "for the sake of the children," just as opponents of divorce say that they take their stand "for the sake of the children."

Which Mother? "Who," asks a newspaper headline, "has the greatest claim to a child—the woman who gave it life, or the woman who made life livable?" This puts rather aptly, I think, the old legal question about a real and foster mother's respective rights to a child.

Sweet Girl Grads Sweet girl graduates who are delivering class orations titled, "After School, What?" and who lean breathlessly on the words of those who have succeeded, might be interested in what Elizabeth Marbury, writer, manager of a literary bureau, and prominent political woman, has to say to them.

Teach him to think of others. Teach him to think in terms of anything except himself. Keep his eyes turned outward. Make a little child divide an apple with his brother or sister. Teach him to help them if they are hurt in his own awkward little way.

At Court The picture is beginning to arrive of those bedazzled females who were presented at court last month. Uniformly they all look terrible, awful ridiculous. The women themselves are not to blame, except as they fish for invitations to be made monkeys of, for the court itself rules what they must wear.

DEVILED EGGS Old-fashioned deviled eggs, cut lengthwise and served with asparagus tips and sliced beets, make a charming salad.

KITCHEN TOUCHES New holders in easy chintz covers, new dish towels, curtains and other kitchen touches make summer easier for the housewife.

Jungle Breath by Ben Lucien Burman

THIS HAS HAPPENED Posing at times as a barber, at others as ATTORNEY DAVIS, a curious man called VILAK has come to the quiet little town of Porto Verde, in west central Brazil, to help his cousin ESTEY MARBERY, solve a strange mystery.

room at the hotel and established himself in the comfortable chamber he had occupied on his first night in her house. In the afternoon it began to rain, but notwithstanding, the two men went to visit the mansions de posits which had been discovered on a wide, rocky plateau which rose a few hundred feet from the general level of Este's Porto Verde properties.

NOW BEGIN THE STORY CHAPTER XIX THE old man, glad to receive another auditor, thrust out his skinny hands. "He has escaped," he mumbled excitedly.

"Who has escaped?" Vilak's glance was puzzled. "The English. The English." Vilak grinned in surprise. "You mean Limey Potts, the Englishman who was put in jail for killing Tony?"

"Yes. Yes. Lemmy. Lemmy." "When did he get out?" "Last night, the gentleman have tell me. Or there morning early maybe. They do not know. Bad man, Lemmy. He kill other man soon, too. You see, maybe. Nice Englishman, nice, had Englishman, bad, worse man than had Brazilian, bad Italian, bad anything. Kill somebody, you see maybe. You see self, you don't believe me he escape, you go."

"Think I will go take a look," Vilak responded, and assuring the old man that his news always surprised that of any other inhabitant of Porto Verde hurried off. A short while later he returned with a small white bag which he held in his hand. "I have brought you a small gift," he said, and handed the bag to the old man. "It is a small gift, but it is a gift from the jungle."

"What does it mean," she asked wonderingly. "Is that a horse you've drawn around the queen?" "Exactly. And the figure behind are mourners, the family of my cherished cousin. Which is merely my quiet way of telling you what will undoubtedly happen if you stay here. Your memory is very short, my dear. One day of quiet—or at least what you think is quiet—and you are sure that all danger is over."

"However, I'm not worried about your leaving. I feel quite certain that when the time comes for your boat the day after tomorrow even you will be only too glad to go. If even tomorrow will be one-tenth as tranquil as you apparently think today was, I'll . . . let's see, what will I wager? A new Paris frock? No, that's not enough. A pearl necklace that will make you a queen, let's see." He laughed. "I know. I'll marry you before nightfall. And knowing my feelings on that subject, and how much that would annoy me, you can guess how secure I feel in my opinion."

"What glorious conceit!" she flashed. "Seriously," he went on, "don't get over confident. It's one of your few faults. Keep close watch over Tinky and over yourself. Have that pistol always with you. There are forces working here which are going to reach the time when you will be a whole man in the new three-decker or 'spare tire' sandwich as Aliene Summer dubs them. The bread may be thin, delicately toasted or not, and the filling, lettuce, sliced tomatoes, nicely browned crisp bacon, slices of white in chicken meat, or a well blended fish mixture, and always mayonnaise dressing."

The "half-way" is the latest sleeve, which would be the old-fashioned elbowlength sleeve except for its unusual cuts which may be flared, circular, puffed or tight with some odd cuff treatment. Quaint grandmother chintzes, linens, voiles, dimities, all washable are the only frocks to choose for the children, for they will be children and get grimy and there is a certain satisfaction in knowing that their clothes will tub perfectly. The new Yosemite green linen, made identically the same, one-piece matching bloomers, smocked at the neck to give fullness, with pockets to represent spring flowers in a basket. The motif was repeated on the short sleeves, but this is not necessary. The simple hats were in a darker shade of green, childish matching bloomers, smocked at the neck to give fullness, with pockets to represent spring flowers in a basket. The plainer hat the smarter it is for the youngsters. For parties even, fine batiste, organdy, voile and imported print dresses are more appropriate for children than chiffons and silk crepes.

Good Nature and Good Health

ALCOHOL AS A MEDICINE The physicians justified in prescribing medicinal alcohol for their patients? This is the third of a series of articles giving the opinions of the world's leading medical authorities on this much discussed question. By DR. MORRIS FISHER

The British physiologist, Ernest H. Starling, in a thorough consideration of the effects of alcohol on the human body, made in 1925, summarized all of the evidence thus far available as to what occurs when this substance is taken into the system.

Under the influence of alcohol the shy and diffident person becomes less fearful of revealing what is pressing on his mind and may even seem temporarily to be a brilliant conversationalist or a witty speaker. It is not surprising, therefore, that alcohol should commonly be regarded as a stimulant. However, the same action contin-

FIRELESS COOKER Hot days should make maximum use of the fireless cooker. The clever housewife can make it cook her supper and leave her afternoon free.

1. How can the bachelor who lives in a single room entertain friends to whom he is socially obligated? Would one dinner or seats to the theater repay for several pleasant week-end parties at friends' country homes? 2. If taking friends to the theater it is necessary to take them to dinner too? If not, how does one meet them? 3. Can a gentleman take an out-of-town guest to luncheon or dinner without asking her hostess too? The Answers 1. Either dinner or theater or both. Yes. 2. No. Call for them in a taxi. 3. Luncheon, yes. But dinner should include the hostess too. not further affect the next lower levels of the nervous system, causing interference with the process of excitation and deteriorates the influence so that if the dose of alcohol is increased, the witty conversation will degenerate into tiresome incoherence and the blurred speech of intoxication. Alcohol is therefore unsuitable for the highest mental efforts or during the performance of prolonged muscular feats. In some people the control of the body by the highest nerve centers is developed to an excessive degree, so that their constitution may actually become weaker with the carrying out of complicated acts acquired by constant practice. To such individuals alcohol acts as a relaxation, diminishing the nerve tension. A man of this type who plays golf sometimes improves his technique by a small dose of alcohol.

STORY BY HAL COCHRAN—PICTURES BY KNICK

(READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE)

Though Scouty fought with all his might, the octopus just held him tight, and soon began to squeeze him till the lad stood very still. Poor Scouty's thoughts ran back to shore. He wished that he was there once more. Said he, "Of under water life, I sure have had my fill."

The octopus seemed satisfied that he had Scouty tightly tied within his long and twisting arms, so settled in the sand. Wee Scouty hardly drew a breath, for, frankly he was scared to death. He only wished he had a knife, or something in his hand.

Just then some bubbles rose nearby, and Scouty heaved a happy sigh. He saw the form of old King Roar not many feet away. "At last I'm saved," he promptly thought. The king will surely see I'm caught." It was enough to make him feel like shouting loud, hurra!

came near. Said he, "Well, goodness, see who's here. It seems the funny octopus is very fond of you. Just stay real still till I return and very shortly you will learn that fighting with an octopus to me is nothing new." Away the king went, out of sight, and left poor Scouty to his plight. But, soon he came right back again and very loudly roared. "Come on you octopus, get set. We're going to fight, and you can bet that you will be surprised when I begin to swing my sword." The fight was very short and sweet. The king, of course, was quite discreet. He swung his trusty sword around as safely as could be. He never touched wee Scouty, but the octopus soon was badly cut, and down it laid upon the sand, and Scouty then was free.

(Scouty rides a seal in the next Then, slow, but sure, the king storr.)

Jack Lockwill's Police Dog

by Gilbert Patten

"I heard him howling, here in the woods, and came to see if I could do anything for him," Jack explained. "That's how I stumbled into that dog-hole." "He howled ever since the Cossacks killed his master," said the boy in a bitter voice. "The Cossacks?" questioned Jack. "That's what we call the dirty State Troopers," explained the small lad. "They shot Pete Malone."

"Then this is Thor, the police dog they told me about," said Jack. "But they didn't say they killed his master. Poor Thor!" Bending, he patted the dog's head.

"You're the only stranger he ever let touch him," said the surprised boy. "It's queer!" Thor stretched himself on the ground, his nose against Jack's foot.

"I'll buy him!" offered Jack, impulsively. "You don't have to," was the reply. "He won't stay with me, but I guess he'll stick by you if you give him a home and take care of him." "I'll do that," promised Jack eagerly. "Then he's yours," returned the boy. "Now let's git outer here. Foller me." He led the way round to solid ground. "Goodby!" he said quickly.

The services of Washington L. O. L. will be held in St. Mary's church either in the afternoon or evening of Sunday, June 26, it was announced today. The service was planned for the morning of that day but because of the Masonic service at the South Methodist church and the fact that some of the Orangemen are also Masons, it was decided to re-arrange the services. Rev. David Kelly of St. Mary's is expected to address the Orange Lodge.

Dates of this year's fairs and agricultural shows that may interest Manchester people are as follows: Brooklyn Fair, Sept. 20-22; Connecticut State, Sept. 4-10; Danbury, Oct. 3-8; Hamburg (Lyme) Sept. 21; Rockville, Aug. 29-Sept. 3; Stafford, Oct. 12-14.

Announcement!

I wish to announce that on Monday I will take over the bakery route formerly operated by my brother, the late George F. Graham and hope to serve all his customers in the same efficient manner in which he did so.

Francis Graham

Change of food needed this time of year

WE all know that this warmer weather requires less heavy, starchy, heat-producing foods—more green vegetables, salads, fresh fruits, etc. Let's remember that this is true especially of desserts this time of year.

Let's not forget the home-made frozen desserts that are so delicious and healthful—also very easy to make. Freeze sherbets, mousses and ices simply by packing in cracked ice and rock salt.

Home made ice cream is also easily made with the improved freezers.

This is one of the many household services where ice stands supreme. No expensive, artificial method can possibly duplicate the many things ice does for the home.

ICE, costing far less than any other household service, is in many ways most important of all.

Pure, sparkling ice makes warm-weather more livable, and more enjoyable. And remember—

THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR ICE.
