

REALE GUILTY COURT FINDS, APPEALS CASE

Oak Street Cobbler Who Had Run-in With Con- stable Duffy Is Fined $25 and Costs; The Testimony

Salvatore Reale, former Oak street cobbler, was found guilty of resisting an officer and fined $25 and costs totalling $36.57 in Manchester Police Court by Judge Raymond A. Johnson today, the outgrowth of an argument Reale had with Constable James Duffy a week ago today when he attempted to collect a personal tax bill. At the time Reale was arrested, he was charged with assault but this was dropped after Reale was charged with resisting an officer by Prosecuting Attorney Charles R. Hathaway. Attorney John J. Burke of East Hartford, counsel for Reale, immediately gave notice of an appeal to the Superior Court in Hartford and bond was fixed at $200. As a result of the injuries Reale suffered, he was in the Memorial hospital over night. Reale has announced he will bring civil suit action against Duffy.

Court's Opinion

Judge Johnson said that there were two angles to the case, assault and resistance, but that he was only concerned with the latter. He was satisfied that there was sufficient evidence as to Reale's guilt on the latter charge and added that any subsequent happenings after the resistance was first offered by Reale had nothing to do with the case as presented to the court. The court was inclined to defend Duffy's action in carrying out his duty but added that it was up to his (Duffy's) discretion whether or not to allow Reale to go upstairs after the money as it was testified in court he offered to do. The judge said that whether Duffy showed good or bad judgment in not permitting Reale to get the money was not the question. In his own testimony, Duffy denied that Reale made any such offer.

The First Blow

Prosecuting Attorney Hathaway won his case on the evidence of Duffy, Chief of Police Samuel G. Gordon and his ability to cross-examine the half a dozen witnesses for the state. He brought out the fact that not one of the witnesses for the defense actually saw who struck the first blow, Duffy or Reale. All of them except Salvatore

DIVER FINDS BODY OF WOMAN IN AUTO

New Haven Woman Drives Car Through Fence; Drops 30 Feet Into Lake.

New Haven, July 9.—A speeding sedan driven by a woman went through an iron picket fence that shuts Lake Whitney from Davis street, Hamden, and dropped straight down an embankment into thirty-two feet of water yesterday afternoon. Two hours later a deep sea diver found the woman's body on the back seat of the car. Still later authorities identified the woman as Inez C. White Degan, a former Cheshire and Waterbury resident, who had been employed as bookkeeper in a local auto supply store.

Today Coroner J. J. Corrigan was attempting to reconstruct the tragedy. It is believed the woman, who had the afternoon off, drove to Cheshire to visit relatives, and in returning to the city attempted to take a road through East Rock park to her home, 110 Foster street, on the south side of the rock. The accident occurred directly north of the rock.

Near Country Club

Within sight of the scene of the tragedy is the exclusive New Haven Country club and homes of people high in social circles here. Lee Wilson Dodd, famous poet and novelist, and Henry Seidel Canby, New York editor, live very close. Mr. Dodd had passed the woman only seconds before the accident as he drove home.

The woman, alone in the machine, seems to have tried a left hand turn to skirt the edge of the lake and pass along Davis street from Whitney avenue to reach the park drive. She failed to straighten her machine which took a slanting course across the road and pushed the supposedly stout fence to the ground, forming a perfect passway for the auto.

Wedged in Seat

When John Quinn, the diver, went down in his suit that he used in descending to sunken vessels and to reach cables far below water in the harbor here, he saw the woman's body had been catapulted from the driver's seat to the rear seat and was wedged there. He worked many minutes as thousands clustered around the shores

23 COUNTRIES PROTEST NEW TARIFF BILL

Nations Most Emphatic in Their Notes to Senate Committee—May Disrupt Trade Relations.

Washington, July 9.—Protests by 23 foreign nations against the Hawley tariff bill written by the House today promised to assume large proportions in the Senate's revision of the measure as Senate subcommittees prepared to close their direct testimony upon the widespread demands of manufacturers for new high rates.

Although the notes delivered to this government and sent to the Senate finance committee have not been officially made public by Senator Smoot (R) of Utah, chairman, the content of many have become known, the protests are declared to be the most emphatic ever delivered against an American tariff bill.

With American foreign trade expanding and Europe still fighting to recover her pre-war place in the business sun, the demands of industry, backed in many instances by farm organizations, for "embargo tariffs" has aroused a high pitch of resentment in many foreign nations.

Italy's Note

The latest note, delivered by the Italian ambassador, attacks the House increase in the tariff on rayon. The Senate rayon subcommittee now is hearing rayon manufacturers' appeal for an increase in the House rates in many instances, because of the alleged threat of foreign competition.

The Italian note declared that rayon imports had decreased from 19,000,000 to 16,000,000 pounds from 1927 to 1928, indicating the dominance of American rayon manufacturers. The latter, however, assert that foreign importations now are increasing more than a million pounds a month.

"While American labor receives higher wages, seemingly an advantage to the Italian manufacturers, this is greatly discounted by the fact that labor in Italy is much less efficient because it lacks adequate machinery," said the note of Ambassador De Martino.

Greeks Protest

The Greek minister, Charalampos Simopoulos, declared in a note that the new tariff policy threatens to disrupt American foreign trade with Greece.

It is evident that as long as high import taxation continually excludes foreign merchants from the American markets, foreign countries will either not be able to buy American goods or they will be compelled to borrow from America to pay for the value of these goods," he said.

More Complaints

The Netherlands government declared that "trade relations are ever more important to the American farms and factories as is clearly shown by the fact that the imports from consumption from the United States into the Netherlands are nearly four times as high as the domestic imports from the Netherlands to the United States."

Fortune in Opium Found in Baggage

Smuggled from China by
Wife of Chinese Vice-Consul in San Francisco.

San Francisco, July 9.—Smuggled opium valued at more than $600,000 was held under guard in the appraisers' building today while customs agents who seized the drugs in the baggage of Mrs. Ying Kao, youthful wife of the Chinese vice-consul in San Francisco, pursued their investigation of what they described as the most brazen plot ever uncovered to smuggle illicit narcotics into the United States.

The baggage was seized when Mrs. Kao arrived from China aboard the steamer Tenyo Maru. Eleven pieces of baggage, it developed, were found with a fortune in contraband opium. There were approximately 3,000 tins, each containing five tins of Portuguese opium.

ROMEWARD BOUND!

Rome was ahead. The propeller roared into action, and a moment after this picture was taken the silver monoplane Pathfinder lifted from the wet sands of Old Orchard Beach, Me., and pointed its light green nose eastward across the Atlantic. Pilot Roger Q. Williams and Navigator Lewis A. Yancey. "Just working men out to do a day's work," made a perfect take-off on their projected 4800-mile trail-blazing flight. The plane, carrying 450 gallons of fuel, was pointed for a new distance record for heavier-than-air craft.

Believe 22 Are Lost As British Sub Sinks

London, July 9.—All hope that the men trapped in the British submarine H-47 which was in a collision today with another British submersible, the L-12, would be saved, has been given up. First Lord of the Admiralty A. V. Alexander announced in the House of Commons this afternoon.

Alexander was uncertain as to the exact number of men aboard the H-47 but stated he thought the loss of life resulting from the accident would be about 22.

The Admiralty chief stated that both submarines were part of an instructional submarine flotilla which was proceeding on maneuvers from Lamlash to Portland.

Drowning Yesterday Drives
Home Need of Methods for Resuscitation.

The drowning of little Frank Rykoski at Union Pond yesterday drives home the fact that the dangerous period of the bathing season is at hand. Efforts to keep children from going in swimming in treacherous waters or else where a lifeguard is on duty proving unavailing it seems timely for Manchester to take some action towards preventing death from drowning.

New York, July 9.—Smothering heat enveloped New York City and the entire Atlantic seaboard area today, causing numerous prostrations and seven deaths.

Cattle Rustlers Operate In Middlesex County

Middletown, July 9.—Cattle rustlers, hane of the ranchers in earlier days of this nation's history, were discovered in this Connecticut vicinity, it has just become known. In four known instances of theft in Middlesex county the thieves have taken two cattle from each farm. That they have the quality of bravado was indicated when they drove a truck up to the doors of the cow barn at Hazenhurst farm in Hadam, part of the estate of the late Edward W. Hazen, loaded a valuable cow and a heifer on the vehicle, and drove away.

NO REPORT OF FLYERS; THOUGHT NEAR AZORES

HAROLD HOWE DIES AFTER LONG FIGHT

Son of Local Tax Collector Succumbs After 3 Years Illness from an Infection.

Harold George Howe, only son of Tax Collector George H. Howe, died at his home, 52 Wadsworth street, at 5:15 this morning. Mr. Howe had been ill for three years with a streptococcal infection which developed from a scratch on a finger. His battle was courageously fought.

New York, July 9.—Although unsuspected since they left Old Orchard, Me., early yesterday, Lewis A. Yancey and Roger Williams flying the airplane, "Pathfinder," were presumed to be still aloft and well along the way to Rome today.

At 3 p. m. if still in the air the intrepid birdmen had been flying for approximately 30 hours and should be near the Azores. The fact that the flyers remained unsuspected has caused no alarm in well-informed aeronautical circles.

KING GEORGE MAY UNDERGO AN OPERATION

London, July 9.—King George may have to undergo another minor operation as the result of the unhealed abscess sinus in the right side of his chest, it was reported this afternoon. However, he had a comfortable night.

News that the king's health is not entirely satisfactory caused a nation-wide surprise in view of the thanksgiving service held in Westminster Abbey on Sunday to render gratitude for the monarch's recovery from his long and dangerous illness of last winter.

PARENTS FRANTIC OVER DROWNING

Another Tragedy Nearly Follows on Footsteps of Fatality Yesterday.

Driven into a frenzy of temporary insanity through the drowning of their youngest son yesterday afternoon at Union Pond at the north end, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Rykoski of 201 Hilliard street were prevented by bystanders from enlarging upon the tragedy.

Only for efforts of policemen and others who crowded about the bank on the east side of the pond where the fatality took place, the consequence would undoubtedly have been much worse.

There is a steep bank at the point where the children went in swimming and although the ground slopes off gradually at the water edge, it drops suddenly a few feet out. Frank, who could swim only a few strokes, ventured out beyond his height and was drowned.

Stanley Golas, 25 North School street and Kustion Kuchenski, 18, of 89 Union street arrived at the scene shortly afterward, donned bathing suits and went into the water in an effort to locate the body.

Police commission, told The Herald today he would see that policemen here are given instructions in resuscitation immediately.

Dr. Moore said that if The Herald desired to conduct a campaign for a fund of about $200 with which to purchase a pulmotor he would contribute $5.00.

Medical Examiner Arrives. The fact that no one had telephoned for a doctor at the time the alarm was first spread was another handicap. It was more than a half an hour after the body had been taken out of the water that Dr. William B. Tinker, medical examiner, arrived at the scene.

Mathew Collapses. The mother was at the scene all during the rescue work and collapsed several times.

Pulls His Knife. The father, too, became temporarily insane. Pulling a jack-knife from his back pocket and opening it he started toward his wife crying in Polish that she was to blame for Frankie going swimming.

Taken Home. It was after the body of the boy had been recovered that the parents became even more hysterical. The father again began chastising his wife and she made three separate attempts to commit suicide.

Those in Group. There is a steep bank at the point where the children went in swimming and although the ground slopes off gradually at the water edge, it drops suddenly a few feet out.

Body Found. Golas was the first to locate the body. Attempts to find it with grappling hooks both from shore and from an old leaky boat that filled with water no less than four times, proved fruitless.

OBITUARY FUNERALS

Michael A. Gorman. The funeral of Michael A. Gorman, of 32 Main street, who died Sunday, was held at St. James's Roman Catholic church at 9 o'clock this morning.

The singers at the church service were Mrs. Claire Brennan, Mrs. Margaret Sullivan, Miss Arlyne C. Moriarty and James Breen.

The bearers were Dr. Edward G. Dolan, Matthew Mulcahy, Patrick J. Hutchinson, John Fitzgerald, Joseph O'Gorman and William H. Burke.

Commander Patrick Bellinger, assistant naval attaché at the United States Embassy here, is leading preparations for receiving the flyers.

Although no word was received here as to what flying field the airman planned to consider their objective, preparations were being made at all the four airports surrounding Rome.

REALE GUILTY COURT FINDS, APPEALS CASE

De Pumbo, and he was too excited and confused to have his testimony first for anything, admitted the first thing they saw was when Duffy and Reale were having a street tussle.

The case opened with Attorney Burke entering a plea of not guilty for his client. The first witness called was Duffy himself.

When it got to me now, he refused. I took him by the arm and told him he was under arrest. Reale broke my grip and struck at me, but missed. I stepped back placing my right hand on my backjack as I did.

Under cross-examination, Duffy denied striking Reale after he fell. Chief Gordon said that when Duffy came to Police Headquarters nearly an hour afterward, he said he started running across the street.

De Pumbo's Testimony. De Pumbo also said the money he offered to go and get the money but Duffy was determined to place him under arrest.

Asked For a Chance. Domenick Enrico, a mason by trade, also testified that he saw Duffy and Reale in the street.

Defense Claims. Attorney Burke for the defense said he could use strong language in describing what he thought of Duffy's action.

MANY CHILDREN JOIN S. M. E. CHURCH SCHOOL

Nearly Sixty Register for Vacation Sessions—Minds and Hands Instructed.

The church vacation school which is being conducted at the South Methodist church this summer for the first time, had an auspicious opening yesterday. It was planned for children between the ages of 6 and 12, primary and junior department only. Forty-three registered in the latter and 16 in the primary department. An additional number is expected today and tomorrow. But all who contemplate attending the sessions of the school should do so from the start if possible.

Miss Myrtle Fryer, kindergarten supervisor in the eighth district schools, is superintendent of the junior department. Miss Ruth Nymann and Miss Marion Legg, Francis Burr is supervising the boys' woodworking classes, from the junior department.

Miss Fryer's pupils are engaged in making flags of the different countries and finding out all they can about the League of Nations. The children are going to do something for the little people of other lands, the whole idea being founded on world peace.

One of the lessons taught the primary children will be that of being happy and making others happy. The first week the subject for religious study will be, "How God Makes People Happy"; the second, "Jesus Making People Happy"; and the third week, "How We Can Make Others Happy."

William Marcenosky of 8 West Road, Rockville, was found guilty of reckless driving by Judge R. A. Johnson in Manchester Town Court this morning. He was defended by Attorney W. J. Shea. Marcenosky was arrested by Sergeant John Crockett as the result of an automobile accident on the Spencer street hill near Bunce's Corner about 8:30 last night. In passing a Dodge coupe driven by John S. Stevenson of 68 Oak street, the driver cut in too short to avoid hitting an approaching car with the result that his car dragged Stevenson's 36 feet. Slight damage was done and no one was hurt.

Miss Ruth Cohn of 19 Proctor Road was driving the car which was approaching and she testified that Marcenosky was driving recklessly. Attorney Shea was of the opinion that the matter was more a violation of the rules of the road than a case of reckless driving. The court thought otherwise and imposed a fine of $40 and costs.

Miss Corinne D. Milne of Rockville had her case postponed until Saturday morning. She was arrested last night on Main street when the Ford coupe she was driving ran up onto the sidewalk before she could bring it to a halt. The brakes were tested and found in bad shape. She is charged with driving with improper brakes.

Salvatore Reale was found guilty of resisting an officer. The details of his case may be found on page one.

SANDY BEACH DANCES

The most elaborate program of the season has been perfected for tomorrow evening at Sandy Beach Ballroom, when Bill Tasillo, Connecticut's most popular and widely known musical director, brings his first band of twelve musicians, including Edward Elliott, Henry Ruf, Howard Sayles, William Schultz and eight other first string musicians to Crystal Lake's largest and most pretentious ballroom for the first of a series of engagements with Edward J. McEnelly and his Victor Recording orchestra and Mal Hallett and his Columbia Recording orchestra. These three splendid bands, rated among the finest in New England, will come to Sandy Beach during July and again during August.

Tomorrow evening, Mr. Tasillo will not only present his original Governor's Foot Guard orchestra of Mrs. Prentice, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Klein.

More than 50 of the Home Builders, the society of young married people at the South Methodist church, gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. N. Prentice of Keeney street last evening. On arriving there they entered upon a program of sports, including baseball, horseshoe pitching and other outdoor games. Later refreshments were served by the committee in charge of the outing, Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Noren, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Smith, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. Prentice, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Klein.

The surroundings at the Prentice home are ideal for an outdoor picnic and everybody enjoyed themselves. Steps have already been taken for the August get-together, which will probably be held at the beach on a part of Capitol Park where Reichard farm, Bolton.

SOVIET RECOGNITION

There never was a question upon which it was easier for a self-respecting mind to reverse itself, without loss of "face," than that of recognition of the Russian Soviet Union. The element of time is an extremely important one in this situation.

During the first several years immediately following the Bolshevik revolution there were very few Americans indeed who could stomach the idea of according recognition to a government so patently the outgrowth of an abominable conspiracy on the part of a small minority as was the one set up by the Russian communists. Every circumstance in connection with the Red revolution combined to make the Soviets anathema from the American point of view. In the first place the promoters of the communistic revolt, sour, savage, bloodthirsty malcontents all of them, ruined what had been hailed, especially in America, as the noblest national movement ever witnessed in Europe, the Kerensky revolution. They brought crashing to the ground an appealing picture of a Russia freed, democratized, filled with splendid aspirations, sure to take place among the leading nations of the earth as soon as the war should be won. They erected in its place a shambles, a thing of horror.

Very few people in this country, outside of that small circle of poseurs and the embittered who are always ready to hail the destruction of the existent have very greatly changed their minds toward the ethics and the social objectives of the Red revolutionists. But time has vastly altered the attitude of probably the majority toward the Bolshevik experiment itself—time and the inevitable alterations that have gone forward in the attitude of the Bolsheviks. From sheer communism the ruling principle of the Soviet state has been modified till it has become little more than state socialism—an organization of industry along "trust" lines with the ownership in the hands of the nation instead of in individuals. Sovietism seems far less terrible today than it did six or eight years ago—probably because it is indeed less terrible. And it has come to be generally recognized, throughout the rest of the world, as largely an affair of Russia and nobody's business, on the outside, so long as the Russians are satisfied.

Meantime, as the modified Russian program develops, two things have made themselves clear—first, that the Russians are somehow or other managing to exist under their peculiar government; second, that they have business to carry on with the world at large. They have things to buy and things to sell. They do not intend to live behind a Chinese wall. And it is a serious question whether there is any justification for or common sense in further refusal to recognize their government. In a very real sense the capacity of the Soviet Union to maintain itself has justified its existence.

In view of these things it is probable that there will be no very serious outbreak of protest if President Hoover should, as it is believed in some quarters he intends doing, lead a movement for the early recognition of the Russian government. That government exists. It is the only government of the great Russian nation. Failure on the part of the United States to recognize it, much longer continued, can do no good and might cost us, in lost trade, far more than we can afford.

NEAR EAST RELIEF

There is a development in the history of the Near East Relief which, frankly, we did not expect to see transpire within our lifetime. It is to surrender its charter and go out of business.

So far as is to be gathered from the near-vaudey statement of its head, Dr. James L. Barton, we have been all wrong about this agency of mercy. We had been, for a good many years, under the impression that the Near East Relief was a rather lavish sort of institution in its administrative expenditures. We are told, however, that "none of the organizers or members of its executive committee ever received a salary for his services" and that the workers who were sent out to the Near East to look after war refugees were "volunteers."

It is, however, equally interesting to learn that $108,000,000 in money, $12,800,000 worth of food from the American Relief Association and a great deal more of value in the way of food, clothing, free conceptions from transportation lines and extensive grants of lands and buildings from foreign governments figured in the budget of the organization.

As to the results obtained it is perhaps sufficient for the Relief to declare that it fed 12,500,000 persons in famine periods, gave medical aid to 6,000,000 and "saved the lives" of 132,000 orphan children—though just how the Relief can be quite sure of the latter fact we cannot even guess.

All we can say about the Near East Relief is that it has somehow or other succeeded in imparting the impression that it spent an undue amount of its intake on publicity, in the maintenance of elaborate offices and numerous personnel and gave jobs to a tremendous number of "workers" in the countries where it operated. Just what is to become of some of them, now that the Relief can no longer find reason for existence, it is difficult to guess. Perhaps some new "relief" organization will be started to take care of them.

PROGRESS

Announcement by the Manchester Electric Company, in a news story in this issue, of a sudden and surprising increase in the domestic use of electricity carries with it an implication that is deserving of considerable thought. It shows, in remarkably concrete example, the effect of specialized effort as contrasted to the operation of public utilities as part of a general scheme to provide conveniences of an acceptable nature.

It is far from being a reflection on the capacity of Cheney Brothers to recognize that, since the big silk concern disposed of the electric light service here to an interest solely concerned with the supply of electrical energy, there has been a quick and healthy development of the electrical business in Manchester. Providing electricity was, on the part of Cheney Brothers, a side issue, embarked upon as a welfare activity rather more than as a business. Naturally, some of the subtler possibilities of a modern power enterprise were permitted to remain more or less static. Now that the service has been put upon a completely independent basis and has taken its place as a full-fledged enterprise in its own right, it is demonstrating a virility hitherto hardly suspected.

Under the Cheney control the policy of the local service was, as was entirely proper under the circumstances, definitely conservative. Now, under a control which is just as definitely progressive, General Manager Heebner finds free scope for the employment of every opportunity in that amazing development of electrical usage which is the particular phenomenon of the times.

DRUNKEN FLIERS

We have read, with close attention, a couple of dozen editorials in as many different newspapers dealing with the death of Wilmer Stults, aviator, and two companions in a crash that indubitably was the result of Stults being drunk; hoping to find in one of them something like a glimmer of an idea that wasn't altogether obvious. No such idea has turned up.

Some feeble suggestion has been made, as inevitably it would be, that something should be done about keeping bootleggers away from the neighborhood of flying fields—which is a good enough suggestion as far as it goes but a bit inadequate since pilots are not prisoners and, if they want to get drunk, can do so far from the vicinity of the field and yet get back to the hangars and the planes long before the load fades out.

As near as we can figure it, drunkenness in aviators is a condition that will have to be reckoned with, prohibition or no prohibition, just about as often as drunkenness has to be reckoned with in the cases of chauffeurs, taxi drivers and private motorists.

Caught operating while drunk the aviator will have to lose his licence—preferably for all time. Aside from that it will have to be up to the passenger to assure himself that he is not embarking in a plane driven by a soused operator. If he can't tell whether the pilot is drunk or sober that is his hard luck—and, besides, all that anybody as stupid as that has to do is to take care, when the plane cracks up, to land on his head.

DROWNING

One of the lamentable aspects of the drowning of a boy in Union Pond yesterday is occasioned by the fact that, though several such deaths have occurred in the same waters over a period of years, nothing has ever been done toward preventing drowning tragedies.

Boys, and girls too, will inevitably gravitate toward bodies of water in hot weather. To splash, to swim, to dive, are instinctive activities. Both the physical and moral well-being of the youngsters demand that these impulses be not altogether suppressed. Yet at the north end there is no supervised facility for outdoor bathing—and there should be.

Union Pond, while scarcely an attractive bathing place from the normal adult point of view, is probably as good a one as many a community is provided with. It is good enough, at all events, to tempt hundreds of young people every summer. It would seem as if, somehow or other, some official action should be taken to forestall the fatalities that are liable to occur there.

Perhaps it would be possible to put a stop to bathing in the more dangerous parts of the pond; perhaps it would be possible to establish legal bathing hours and provide a life guard and a usable boat. Certainly conditions at the pond could be greatly improved and the hazard to the youngsters who bathe there—and inevitably will continue to bathe there—very much lessened if the community will but interest itself in the matter.

Washington, July 9.—Here in Washington is a remarkable community, a city by itself, where the family of cabinet members, senators, diplomats, high-priced lobbyists and social celebrities live and play among themselves the year around. There is nothing like it, anywhere else in America or, presumably, in the world.

One refers to the Wardman Park Hotel, which, with its new additions and annexes and grounds covers 14 acres and houses about 3000 souls. With its great lobbies and dining rooms, its tennis and its recreational facilities, this plant becomes just about the most attractive spot in Washington in summertime. It would be a favorite spot for tourists who like to see the so-called great life and enjoy themselves if it were not rather off the beaten path, a couple of miles out Connecticut avenue just beyond the million-dollar bridge across Rock Creek.

A Mixed Clientele

This is the scene of some of the capital's most fashionable public dances, swimming parties, riding parties, drinking parties and tea parties.

Out at Wardman Park live Muddy Euel, the Washington baseball catcher, and Edith King, leading lady of the local stock company, under the same roof with Secretary of State Stimson and parrot, Postmaster General Brown and Secretary of Commerce Robert F. La Follette and their families. Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Charles Francis Adams were there until a few days ago.

And numerous members of the "little cabinet," including Assistant Attorney General Marshall and George E. Farnum, First Assistant Postmaster General John M. Bartlett and Second Assistant W. Irving Glover, Assistant Treasury Solicitor Harry K. Daugherty, Assistant Secretary of the Interior Carl T. Schuneman, Director of the Mint Robert J. Grant, Immigration Commissioner Harry Hull, Commissioner of Internal Revenue David H. Blair and others.

Two or three of the smaller Latin American nations maintained legations at the Wardman Park until recently. The Swiss and Uruguayan ministers, Mark Peter and J. Varela, live there with their families. Other diplomats and attaches include First Secretary Conrado Traverso of the Argentine

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Cereals With Fruit

Question—Mrs. H. G. K. asks:

"Are cereals with sliced fresh fruit a good combination?"

Answer—Cereals should never be combined with acid fruits. However, a glass of orange juice taken about an hour before a cereal breakfast is all right, as the juice leaves the stomach almost entirely within that time.

Always Clearing Throat

Question—Mrs. K. B. writes: "I have to clear my throat real often, although I don't bring up anything. It doesn't seem to be a habit. Could you tell me what causes this?"

Answer—Such symptoms are often forerunners of tuberculosis or bronchitis. Any irritation in the lungs may create the desire to cough up. If the cause of the irritation is not removed, there may finally develop enough degeneration so that phlegm and pus will gather in quantities large enough

GOING PLACES AND SEEING THINGS

Los Angeles, July 9.—Some of the attractions of Los Angeles, not to be found in the guide books: . . . the avocado salads . . . And swell orange juice at 10 cents a big glass . . . The Wednesday luncheon . . . at the Montmartre . . . the late night movie crowd at Harry's . . . And a sufficient number of elegant chili parlors to please even George Clark, the artist.

The Beach Route to San Diego . . . The buffet luncheons at the Victor Hugo . . . If they'd only take down those peacock decorations! . . . The lovely ladies one sees in the hotel lobbies . . . And not unfrequently . . . The coffee and rolls of the beach one gets from the Mentone, perched high in the Santa Monica hills, while munching chicken "southern style" . . . Particularly when you're the guest of Jack Dempsey and Estelle Taylor . . . All along the road they stop their cars and stare, the while you preen your hair.

Which reminds me: Jack's latest chauffeur drove for the Prince of Wales when his highness was hunting in Africa. He saved the prince's life once when a would-be assassin walked up with a gun. The driver shot the man down cold. . . . And later came to America to avoid the unpleasantness and possible publicity. At least, such was the story I heard while driving along in the car.

The noontime lunch hour in the studio restaurants of Hollywood is a trip into fantasy land. It is though some costume ball were going on endlessly, what with the assemblage of hussars, princes, football players, minstrels and what-not. Thus escaped from a land of workaday romance—that is, for all except the fans who adore them—they sit and talk of the quality of the day's work and about the latest bit of scandal and, not infrequently, they talk about themselves. There are times when it becomes a bit difficult to pry them loose from this. This self-engrossment is a form of hypnosis which grips Hollywood in a vise and a vice at the same time. Each director is making "my" picture and so is each camera man and so is the smallest player in the cast. To all intents and purposes there are no other pictures being made, or is there anything much of importance left in the world.

Thanks to the high position of Los Angeles among the convention cities, the business of decorating the streets and buildings is one of the leading industries. In times gone each merchant hung out his own flags and banners, but the turnover of Shriners, Elks, Moose and all the rest came so fast that the idea of general harmony was hit upon. Now decorations are in readiness for all occasions and are made to order on a wholesale scale.

Specialization brought such good results that other convention towns began to adopt the idea. The companies here now supply a number of cities. I was told that the Legion convention in Louisville, for instance, was in the hands of the Angelino experts.

A young man by the well-known name of Jones, so they tell me, started it all. He was merely a salesman in a decorating house a few years ago and now has a hundred thousand dollar outfit. He is said to have one of the most elaborate collections of flags in America and when some international group wanted the flags of 58 nations at once, out came Jones with all of them within half an hour. Following the pioneer came two-dozen concerns and faster here than you can keep up with them.

So do press agents. There are so many press agents that they have to wear badges to identify each other or to be distinguished from the mere public. There's a gag to the effect that wherever you see four men, three of them are publicity representatives and the fourth "the victim."

This plague of publicity getters settled upon the town when movie people realized that they had to keep their names before the public. Everyone became a publicity man, and the result was a swarming all over the place.

GILBERT SWAN.

BRADDOCK'S DEFEAT

One hundred and seventy-four years ago today, on July 9, 1755, General Edward Braddock was mortally wounded and his British regulars routed in a battle near Fort Duquesne in the French and Indian War.

England sent Braddock to Virginia to lead an army of British troops against the French who were claiming the Ohio valley. Accompanied by Colonel Washington who was later to lead the continental army, Braddock advanced from Fort Cumberland and began to climb the rough ridges of the Alleghenies planning to attack Fort Duquesne.

Three hundred ax-men cleared the way. Behind them came the British regulars, a glittering army of scarlet and steel. Braddock despised the back-woods method of fighting and disregarded Washington's warning of possible ambush.

Suddenly, the English advance was greeted with a terrific war whoop and was fired upon from both sides by an unseen foe, while the French attacked in front.

Braddock fell, mortally wounded, and the British regulars were cut to pieces. The Virginians, with Washington at their head, saved half the British army of 1,200 men.

HOW TO USE POULTICES

Poultices are valuable home remedies to be used whenever one desires to bring about a more rapid discharge of pus from an inflammatory infection. They are valuable in bringing boils and carbuncles to a head, and in bringing about a discharge of small splinters or thorns, and in serving to prevent blood poisoning from puncture wounds by rusty septic objects.

Through the use of the poultice, one has an easily applied method of securing continued heat and moisture to a part. The heat causes a dilation of the capillaries and a greater supply of blood and in this way strengthens the defenses of the body. The moisture softens the skin structures and helps to dilute toxins. The discharge tends to "work outward" through the action of the heat.

Many different substances may be used for the preparation of poultices, the most commonly used poultices being made from cornmeal, flaxseed, potatoes, bread and hops, but practically any substance of a mushy nature may be used if these are not available. Leaves may be boiled and applied hot. Mud may be boiled and used, rice, etc., the efficacy being not so much in any substance contained in the poultice material as in the effect of the heat and moisture. The consistency should be quite soft but not enough to run.

The usual way of making a poultice is to spread out a piece of old muslin or cheese cloth. The area of the muslin should be nine times as big as the finished poultice, and the hot mush should be poured in the center of the muslin, which is then folded over each side so that the two overlapping edges are on top. The poultice may then be tied upon the part with the free ends or with another piece of muslin, allowing the mushy substance to come as close to the affected area as possible.

Poultices should be applied just as hot as can be borne. If the poultice becomes cold, it may be removed and dipped into boiling water for a minute or two and then re-applied. To keep the poultice warm, it should be covered with oiled silk or waxed paper, and over this a heavy folded towel or piece of woolen material.

Poultices may be left on all night and, if the patient falls asleep in the morning, the moisture continues to be valuable even after they have become cold.

A properly prepared poultice will not stick to the skin when it is removed. After removal, the skin should be washed with warm water and the pus or splinter can be squeezed out. If the pus has not come to a head the poultice should be renewed. Applied in time, poultices will often prevent serious complications.

Which reminds me: Jack's latest chauffeur drove for the Prince of Wales when his highness was hunting in Africa. He saved the prince's life once when a would-be assassin walked up with a gun. The driver shot the man down cold. . . . And later came to America to avoid the unpleasantness and possible publicity. At least, such was the story I heard while driving along in the car.

The noontime lunch hour in the studio restaurants of Hollywood is a trip into fantasy land. It is though some costume ball were going on endlessly, what with the assemblage of hussars, princes, football players, minstrels and what-not. Thus escaped from a land of workaday romance—that is, for all except the fans who adore them—they sit and talk of the quality of the day's work and about the latest bit of scandal and, not infrequently, they talk about themselves. There are times when it becomes a bit difficult to pry them loose from this. This self-engrossment is a form of hypnosis which grips Hollywood in a vise and a vice at the same time. Each director is making "my" picture and so is each camera man and so is the smallest player in the cast. To all intents and purposes there are no other pictures being made, or is there anything much of importance left in the world.

Thanks to the high position of Los Angeles among the convention cities, the business of decorating the streets and buildings is one of the leading industries. In times gone each merchant hung out his own flags and banners, but the turnover of Shriners, Elks, Moose and all the rest came so fast that the idea of general harmony was hit upon. Now decorations are in readiness for all occasions and are made to order on a wholesale scale.

Specialization brought such good results that other convention towns began to adopt the idea. The companies here now supply a number of cities. I was told that the Legion convention in Louisville, for instance, was in the hands of the Angelino experts.

A young man by the well-known name of Jones, so they tell me, started it all. He was merely a salesman in a decorating house a few years ago and now has a hundred thousand dollar outfit. He is said to have one of the most elaborate collections of flags in America and when some international group wanted the flags of 58 nations at once, out came Jones with all of them within half an hour. Following the pioneer came two-dozen concerns and faster here than you can keep up with them.

So do press agents. There are so many press agents that they have to wear badges to identify each other or to be distinguished from the mere public. There's a gag to the effect that wherever you see four men, three of them are publicity representatives and the fourth "the victim."

This plague of publicity getters settled upon the town when movie people realized that they had to keep their names before the public. Everyone became a publicity man, and the result was a swarming all over the place.

BRADDOCK'S DEFEAT

One hundred and seventy-four years ago today, on July 9, 1755, General Edward Braddock was mortally wounded and his British regulars routed in a battle near Fort Duquesne in the French and Indian War.

England sent Braddock to Virginia to lead an army of British troops against the French who were claiming the Ohio valley. Accompanied by Colonel Washington who was later to lead the continental army, Braddock advanced from Fort Cumberland and began to climb the rough ridges of the Alleghenies planning to attack Fort Duquesne.

Three hundred ax-men cleared the way. Behind them came the British regulars, a glittering army of scarlet and steel. Braddock despised the back-woods method of fighting and disregarded Washington's warning of possible ambush.

Suddenly, the English advance was greeted with a terrific war whoop and was fired upon from both sides by an unseen foe, while the French attacked in front.

Braddock fell, mortally wounded, and the British regulars were cut to pieces. The Virginians, with Washington at their head, saved half the British army of 1,200 men.

HOW TO USE POULTICES

Poultices are valuable home remedies to be used whenever one desires to bring about a more rapid discharge of pus from an inflammatory infection. They are valuable in bringing boils and carbuncles to a head, and in bringing about a discharge of small splinters or thorns, and in serving to prevent blood poisoning from puncture wounds by rusty septic objects.

Through the use of the poultice, one has an easily applied method of securing continued heat and moisture to a part. The heat causes a dilation of the capillaries and a greater supply of blood and in this way strengthens the defenses of the body. The moisture softens the skin structures and helps to dilute toxins. The discharge tends to "work outward" through the action of the heat.

Many different substances may be used for the preparation of poultices, the most commonly used poultices being made from cornmeal, flaxseed, potatoes, bread and hops, but practically any substance of a mushy nature may be used if these are not available. Leaves may be boiled and applied hot. Mud may be boiled and used, rice, etc., the efficacy being not so much in any substance contained in the poultice material as in the effect of the heat and moisture. The consistency should be quite soft but not enough to run.

The usual way of making a poultice is to spread out a piece of old muslin or cheese cloth. The area of the muslin should be nine times as big as the finished poultice, and the hot mush should be poured in the center of the muslin, which is then folded over each side so that the two overlapping edges are on top. The poultice may then be tied upon the part with the free ends or with another piece of muslin, allowing the mushy substance to come as close to the affected area as possible.

Poultices should be applied just as hot as can be borne. If the poultice becomes cold, it may be removed and dipped into boiling water for a minute or two and then re-applied. To keep the poultice warm, it should be covered with oiled silk or waxed paper, and over this a heavy folded towel or piece of woolen material.

Poultices may be left on all night and, if the patient falls asleep in the morning, the moisture continues to be valuable even after they have become cold.

A properly prepared poultice will not stick to the skin when it is removed. After removal, the skin should be washed with warm water and the pus or splinter can be squeezed out. If the pus has not come to a head the poultice should be renewed. Applied in time, poultices will often prevent serious complications.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Cereals With Fruit

Question—Mrs. H. G. K. asks:

"Are cereals with sliced fresh fruit a good combination?"

Answer—Cereals should never be combined with acid fruits. However, a glass of orange juice taken about an hour before a cereal breakfast is all right, as the juice leaves the stomach almost entirely within that time.

Always Clearing Throat

Question—Mrs. K. B. writes: "I have to clear my throat real often, although I don't bring up anything. It doesn't seem to be a habit. Could you tell me what causes this?"

Answer—Such symptoms are often forerunners of tuberculosis or bronchitis. Any irritation in the lungs may create the desire to cough up. If the cause of the irritation is not removed, there may finally develop enough degeneration so that phlegm and pus will gather in quantities large enough

THIS HAS HAPPENED

IRIS MORGAN, wife of JOHN CURTIS MORGAN, successful lawyer, deserts him for BERT CRAWFORD, a family friend. NAN CARROLL, Morgan's secretary, is deeply in love with Morgan and saves him from utter despair by cleverly forcing him into his work. For six months she acts as long-distance housekeeper for him, winning the love of his child, little six-year-old CURTIS MORGAN.

Morgan breaks the news to her that he is divorcing Iris and stressing his anxiety to marry her. She consents. Her farcical marriage has continued three months when Iris, flitted by Crawford, returns.

Feigning illness, she tries to bring the bewildered Morgan to his knees. Nan, crushed, determines to fight and asks the doctor to remove Iris to a hospital. Curtis, who sees his mother daily, becomes ill as a result of the forbidden sweets she gives him. He wakes up Christmas morning with an attack of appendicitis. Morgan's wife, WILLIS TODD, a former suitor of Nan's to Christmas dinner. In spite of the strained atmosphere they spend a happy Christmas. While Morgan is in the capital on business, the maid telephones Nan that Iris is stripping the house of her things and is moving into a cottage across the street.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XLIV

Not even Nan's quixotic conscience could succeed in troubling her seriously when she had time to consider the fact that she had been ruthlessly ransacked of their finest treasures. Only the plainest, most utilitarian of the sheets, towels, table cloths and napkins remained. Nan shrugged and dismissed the maid. She had a magnet drawing missing from library, drawing room and dining room; pictures gone from almost every wall; great gaps in the book shelves.

Resolutely, her emotions numbed by the deed, she forced herself to enter the bed room which had once been occupied by Iris and the man who was then her husband.

Nan expected to find the room denuded. Certainly Iris could claim legitimately that all its furnishings belonged to her. Vividly Nan recalled the occasion of the room's redecoration — an eighth wedding anniversary present from John Curtis Morgan to his wife. It had been Iris's idea, as Morgan's secretary, to take the exorbitant bills and write checks for them. Oh, yes, the contents of this room of all rooms were certainly Iris Morgan's to do with as she pleased.

But on the threshold Nan stopped and stared, incredulously at first, then with a dawn of comprehension which made her childish mouth set in a hard, cynical smile. The room was exactly as Iris had left it nearly a year ago. The amethyst and blue-green taffeta drapes still hung at the windows; the narrow beds of inland Chinese teakwood were still dressed in their blue-green taffeta spreads, as if demurely awaiting their rightful occupants.

Not even the vanity dressing table, with its rich treasure of scent bottles, jars and boxes in amethyst crystal had been touched. "So you've left it ready for your return," Nan mentally addressed the other woman. "Clever of you, Iris. To have transplanted this room from this house to your temporary home would have been an acknowledgment of defeat. But to leave it here, waiting. . . Oh, yes, clever of you, Iris!" The brown head jerked up then; the red light of battle glowed in eyes that had been stony with anger and contempt. "Well, Iris!" she challenged her unseen rival, "I think it's about time I was clever, too!"

The result of that resolution was a conference the very next day between Nan Morgan and one of the city's most trustworthy interior decorators. Shortly after their marriage Morgan had paid his new wife the courtesy of adding her name to his in a joint checking account the bank. Now, without compunction, she prepared to draw upon it almost to the extent of its capacity, in an effort to banish the ghost of Iris Morgan from her home and his.

wife of any age. It must be quietly charming and utterly comfortable. Completed, it was just that. It even looked as if it had been lived in. Nan discovered, as she studied her new guest room with quiet satisfaction. No smallest reminder here of exotic Iris. In her files at the office reposed a warehouse receipts for all the gaudy trappings and furnishings which had given place to the new.

"If you win, Iris," Nan mentally promised her rival, "you may have the receipt, with my compliments to a better woman than I am." Even as she uttered this bravado to herself, Nan knew that she was simply whistling to keep her courage up. It had not been so difficult to be brave, clever and hard as safely away from the spell of the woman across the street. But in 24 hours he would be home again, and then—what?

The Bradley case, which John Curtis Morgan was defending on appeal before the state supreme court, did not go to the jury until Tuesday noon. The Blackhall case was to re-open the next day, after an adjournment due to the sudden, serious illness of the star witness, the old butler, Edgars. Nan spent the whole of Tuesday working on the Blackhall case, so that her husband should find everything in readiness for the delayed opening on Wednesday.

At half-past five his telegram came. Nan had not yet left the office. There was no need now for her to rush home to Curtis, for the child, obeying his mother's command, was spending his afternoon in the little house across the street. Nan had not dared issue a counter-order to the child to stay at home. If such an order was to be issued, it must come from the father.

She opened the telegram. "Leaving 5:10. Arrive 11:15. Lost. Please meet me. John." Lost! Nan stared at the word. How sore his heart must be! He had so counted on winning this case. Lost. Not very many times in his career as a criminal lawyer had John Curtis Morgan been forced to make that confession. Through her tears, Nan saw the very letters of the word "lost" as if they were like a cry from her heart to his—not, "I've lost," but "I am lost." Would he not be "lost" indeed, when he came home to find Iris almost in his very house—the width of a street between her and him? A magnet drawing, drawn, until he was lost indeed.

Nan closed her eyes for a moment, then looked at the message again. "Please meet me." Suddenly her excitement swelled in her heart. He was sad and discouraged, and he was crying out to her for comfort. When she met him at the train, his effort to be casual and philosophical over his defeat made her want to press his head against her breast and murmur broken little words of love and comfort.

"Well, Nan—that's that!" he said, his mouth quivering downward in the smile she knew so well. But he did not smile in his deep-set black eyes. "Guess we were about due for a tumble. Morgan & Morgan were getting too cocky. . . But we mustn't slip up on the Blackhall case."

Because there was so much that she wanted to say, and which she could not yet bring herself to utter, Nan was unusually silent on the drive homeward. Morgan, glad to let her have the wheel, relaxed against the cushions and closed his eyes. He had not once taken his arm from about her shoulders.

"Here we are, dear," Nan said, when they were turning into their own driveway. "Sorry to disturb you. I was almost asleep," he admitted, as he sprang out to open the garage doors for her. Two or three minutes later, as they walked arm and arm along the driveway to the front of the house, Morgan exclaimed: "Well, well! I see the Fanner cottage has been rented. Who are our new neighbors, Nan?"

Nan couldn't tell him, not to-night, when he was so tired and sad. While she was still struggling for words—any words rather than the truth, the necessity for answering was taken out of her hands. For the porch light of the little house across the street came on at just that moment, and out of the door stepped two figures—a man and a woman. Nan recognized the man instantly as Rufus Hubbard, a divorce lawyer. The woman, of course, was Iris Morgan. Beneath her beauty, enhanced by a formal evening gown, was a breath-taking revelation.

Morgan stopped stone still and stared. Nan felt his arm contract and harden until her own hand, tucked within it, was almost crushed by the pressure. He did not move or speak until Iris had called a gay good-night to her caller and vanished within the house. When Rufus Hubbard's jaunty stride had carried him to the sidewalk, the light flashed off. Then slowly, heavily, Morgan scented the eggs of his own house. He usually had not mentioned between Nan and husband that night, but it was a man with sick eyes and deep, new lines in his haggard face that the girl kissed her good-night just outside her own bedroom door.

The next morning Nan was not surprised to see Iris Morgan on her own porch, obviously awaiting her former husband's appearance. Brazenly, in defiance of neighbors who might witness the scene, Iris beckoned to Morgan, imperiously. He paused uncertainly on the step, his hand tightened convulsively upon Nan's shoulder; then, as her eyes lifted to meet him, they spoke eloquently of a tragic, humble plea for guidance or permission, perhaps, that she nodded mutely. —She was about to turn back into the house, when the thought of the neighbors whom Iris scorned to consider stopped her. If any common gossip was catching from behind a curtain, let her also report that John Curtis Morgan's wife had sanctioned that interview to take place across the street. As she forced herself to look on, she was regarded for the effort it cost her to stay by seeing Morgan firmly and definitely refuse his former wife's invitation to enter the house. Whatever was said between them—and the interview was brief, due obviously to Morgan's impatience to be gone—was said on the porch. Faintly across the street came the tremulous cadences of Iris' voice.

After a very few minutes the man turned his back upon the market to-day, but there is no need for us to inquire until it is sold. We can be quite comfortable at a hotel for a few days, until we find a suitable house."

Relief so exquisite that it squeezed happy tears out of her eyes swept over Nan's heart. He had not failed her, God bless him! Now she must not fail him. "What! Sell this place, when I've just had so much fun redecorating? No! If I have anything to say about it, I'll stay here!" Her voice was gaily indignant, but her steady eyes said something very different: "We mustn't run, John. We can't win this fight by running away from it."

And it was what her eyes said that he answered. "Thank you, Nan." Then, not looking at her; "I have given my permission, Nan, for Curtis to visit his mother every afternoon. I could not refuse. It is all she has left."

"I have not kept him from her," Nan answered evenly.

"I know," he agreed quickly. "And—thank you again, Nan. . . Now we've got to make a dash for it, without delay. We're lunching to-day, dear, and—don't worry!" During the week that followed, Nan had many occasions to recall his futile advice. "Don't worry," her lips twisted in that new, cynical, bitter smile that set so oddly upon their young softness.

One of the densest smoke screens I know of when it comes to learning is "perplexity." Mix a child up at the beginning and he won't learn a thing. As far as that goes, he needn't be a child, for any of us will be the biggest numbskulls alive if we can't see clearly and intelligently where we're going or what we're doing.

Somebody, when I dream come true, I believe that schools will pay more attention to beginnings and less to endings. Educators who get to the roots of things are discovering that if they take care of the beginnings the endings will take care of themselves.

The future school will do a lot of explaining to children when new subjects are started and see that a child knows what he's going to do before he does it, why he's going to do it, and what it's all about.

Pupils Become Prejudiced. Children often get crammed full of complexes — let's call them prejudices in a new grade because rumor comes down from above that "discount," or "denominate numbers," or "the discoveries," or "the administrations" are hard.

That prejudice has to be removed from a boy's or girl's mind before he can attempt to learn. Teachers now testing the discoveries start with Old World history and explain why those brave adventurers started off to the ends of the earth. Why not call them the "voyages," or the "adventures." That's what they were.

Get out the dictionary and explain the meaning of the word "administration." I have known children who called through "The Presidents" who didn't tell you what that long puzzling word meant, at the end of the year. We take too much for granted, without doubt. Arithmetic of all things must be taught very, very slowly at first. Here fundamental must be taught thoroughly. If anywhere, or a child will be completely lost.

Teachers Can Help. I just happen to think of something a man told me recently. He stopped high school twenty years ago on account of Latin. He was too stupid to get it, and decided, and that it was the end of his education. It seems that no one told him what it was all about.

Parents with children trying to make up work in summer school might keep these things in mind. They can help a lot at home.

Hints On How To Keep Well by World Famed Authority

PURITY OF WATER AND MILK MOST ESSENTIAL IN HOT WEATHER.

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN, Editor Journal of the American Medical Association and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine.

Ever since men began to put two and two together and make anything from one to five as the answer, there have been strange notions regarding the effects of weather on health and on disease.

Even Noah Webster, who wrote the dictionary, wrote a two-volume work on the relationship of weather to disease.

People talk about healthy weather and unhealthy weather without having a very clear idea of just what it is which the epidemiologists and the meteorologists and the statisticians get somewhere in this matter by keeping exact records of changes in the weather and disease and death rates but even here it is necessary to take into account other factors such as movements of the population and of the types of food eaten and of the effects of various temperatures and moistures on the growth of germs.

Because of some of the factors that have been mentioned, typhoid fever occurs most frequently in summer and early fall. During the summer people drink more than in winter and they are careless about the source of the water, or milk, or other beverages that they drink. In the warm weather the germs multiply more rapidly in the contaminated fluids.

Investigations made by the National Research Council showed that the highest death rates occurred in New York City on the coldest days, the least on days when the temperature was between 60 degrees and 75 degrees F., and that the mortality rises when the temperature begins to go much above 75 degrees F. The effects of severe weather are seen a few days after it occurs in the form of pneumonia, bronchitis and other diseases of the respiratory tract.

No doubt much of this increased incidence is due to the lowering of resistance that comes with exposure but a great deal of it is also due to the crowding together that takes place in the cold weather and to the spread of the germs through the secretions that have been mentioned.

Johannesburg. — Experiments conducted here are declared to have proved that sleep can be stored with a view to drawing on reserves for purposes of work or pleasure.

The personnel of the experimenting group consisted of two women and four men—a stenographer, a schoolmistress, a mine foreman, a miner, an accountant, and a draftsman—all between the ages of 21 and 30.

As a result of preliminary tests, normal sleep requirements were fixed in the case of the women at seven hours each; two men seven hours, one six and one five. Altogether 32 tests were made under varying conditions. The experimenters were all physically fit and took plenty of outdoor exercise.

While the ribald opponents of our great national joke of prohibition will chortle much at the few remarks on the subject which Mrs. Mabel Walker Wilbrandt, retiring Nemesis of the opponents, has to make in the current "Ladies' Home Journal," there is a great deal of logic in her viewpoint that liquor does not promote real sociability so much as it hinders it.

QUOTES TEDDY. She says that society is rapidly believing Theodore Roosevelt's opinion of drinking. She quotes him—

"There isn't a thought in a hoghead of alcohol. There isn't an idea in a whole brewery. Nothing of merit has even been written or done under the inspiration of alcohol. It stupefies without invigorating. And its effect upon the brain is to stagnate thought."

OUR BETTERS. She herself writes—

The ribaldry of the cocktail shaker, the exchange of home-brew recipes, and the florid eagerness for false stimulation from what is always questionable liquor are rapidly fading from the picture of social hours in Washington.

While the ribald opponents of our great national joke of prohibition will chortle much at the few remarks on the subject which Mrs. Mabel Walker Wilbrandt, retiring Nemesis of the opponents, has to make in the current "Ladies' Home Journal," there is a great deal of logic in her viewpoint that liquor does not promote real sociability so much as it hinders it.

QUOTES TEDDY. She says that society is rapidly believing Theodore Roosevelt's opinion of drinking. She quotes him—

"There isn't a thought in a hoghead of alcohol. There isn't an idea in a whole brewery. Nothing of merit has even been written or done under the inspiration of alcohol. It stupefies without invigorating. And its effect upon the brain is to stagnate thought."

OUR BETTERS. She herself writes—

The ribaldry of the cocktail shaker, the exchange of home-brew recipes, and the florid eagerness for false stimulation from what is always questionable liquor are rapidly fading from the picture of social hours in Washington.

ALCOHOL makes people chatter. All parties in Washington are so mixed that many of the guests, in fact, do not drink, even when drinks are offered. Some who do have confessed to me, with a smile at themselves, that the entertaining uneasy recollections of loquaciousness the next morning.

MAKING JOHNNY GOOD. While, as I said, there is much food—or drink—for thought in the lady writer's dissertation, it savors of a patronizing condescension that will have few results.

It implies that if Society with a capital can give up liquor surely the least of us will hastily and frantically toddle to follow suit.

It savors of the maternal parent's attempts to make Johnny a good boy by telling him how good a boy he is. "Of course, he won't cry; he's a big man now."

DAUGHTER'S BRIDESMAID. Although she was 10 1/2 years old, and may or may not have been many times a bridesmaid, as well as a bride, Mrs. Lorena Waites of Toledo, O., was bridesmaid at her daughter's wedding the other day. Strictly speaking, she was probably matron of honor, and her 73-year-old son, brother of the bride was best man.

MAMA'S HAPPY. And here's wagging that with all the joys she must have known in her more than a century of years, none compared with this. Mothers are like that. Because they themselves chose marriage as their path of life, they must assume that it's the only path for their daughters, too. They may pretend to be resigned when the daughters think otherwise; but they'd trot to the hymeneal altar as gladly as did this 101-year-old.

HOORAY! At last! Science in her infinite wisdom has bestowed upon a waiting world that bath tub rack for which we've all been waiting so long.

Now after one of those proverbial hard days at the office, you can immerse your alabaster frame in your favorite scented water, haul out the detective story, and be all set for one of the pleasantest hours known to man—warm water, relaxation, a book, these three—even better than the famous loaf of bread and jug of wine and these beneath the bough.

FAINT RAY OF HOPE FOR U.S. SEEN IN DAVIS CUP NET PLAY

Victory of Allison and Van Ryn in Wimbledon Doubles Seen as End of French Reign.

By DAVIS J. WALSH

New York, July 9.—It was the hand of fate that traced a message of doom to Nebuchadnezzar when the feast was at its height and today it raised an admonitory foreigner as a warning to France, gorged with most of the honors within the gift of international lawn tennis, that the inevitable famine is in the offing. The warning was issued not on the soil of France, to be divorced from the Davis Cup at a comparatively early date, or on that of American, the land to which the trophy must ultimately return. It was issued on the neutral site of Wimbledon where on Saturday Wilmer Allison, of Texas, and Johnny Van Ryn, of New York, gained America's first major victory of recent years in international doubles.

Probably it would be asking the unreasonable to expect the American team of 1929 to lift the famous grail from what many Americans regard as the unhallowed ground it now occupies. Tilden was the only American to reach the Wimbledon semi-finals in the singles and he was beaten by Henri Cochet in straight sets. France, therefore, remains unchallenged in singles play the world over and probably can and will win in this department the three matches necessary to the retention of the cup in the challenge round late this month.

But the wedge that will loosen its moorings this year and cause the cup to rock and totter and ultimately fall in the year or two immediately following was the victory of Allison and Van Ryn, young, highly inexperienced Americans, in the Wimbledon all-comers' final.

It meant that American perseverance finally had beaten Europe—and France in particular—at its own game. It meant that an American doubles team had attained world dominion for the first time since Tilden and Johnston occupied their throne on the sheer brilliance of their individualism. It meant ultimate victory where many had looked forward to years of failure.

The doubles constitute the "odd" match of the Davis Cup series; therefore, if the opposing singles players are a stand off, the doubles constitute the great decider. And for two or more years France's combination of Cochet and Brugnon has had the doubles conceded to it before it started. But no more.

Its domination ended Saturday or, to be more precise, at least forty-eight hours earlier, at which time no less than three American teams, namely Van Ryn and Allison, Tilden and Hunter and Cochet and Hennessey, qualified for the semi-finals. Meantime, the French entries, Cochet and Brugnon and Landry and Boussus, had been run right out of the tournament. America, in consequence, will enter the challenge round this year with the fighting chance that must be conceded to any team that has the "drop" on at least one match before a racket is flashed.

I don't presume to know the mind of the Davis Cup committee but, frankly, it apparently can do no less than name Van Ryn and Allison for the challenge round in doubles. They are a kid team but youth is an added recommendation when it happens to have also the will to win and the ability to do so. Neither of its principals previously had given evidence of international tendencies; Van Ryn, indeed, was making his first appearance of consequence in a major tournament.

But no matter. They furnished all the evidence necessary when they defeated Tilden and Hunter in the semi-finals and then on Saturday won a heart-breaking five set match from Collins and Gregory, the Englishmen, who had climbed over Cochet and Brugnon and Lott and Hennessey on their way to the final. In fact, that isn't evidence; that's proof.

A. A. U. records went shattering all over the place when these athletes put on their act during the recent championship tourney at Denver. The pole vaulter is Harold McAtee of Michigan State, clearing the bar at 13 feet 4 3/4 inches, a new junior record. Richard Barber of the Los Angeles A. C. pictured above in the broad jump, just missed a new mark by a fraction of an inch. He leaped 24 feet 2 1/2 inches. Jed Welsh of the Los Angeles A. C. is shown finishing the 120-yard-high hurdles in 14.9, a new junior championship record.

SAY THAT CARDINAL MANAGER IS GOING TO LOSE HIS HEAD

All Sorts of Rumors About Managers Are Current; Southworth Doing Well With Club He Has.

New York, July 9.—Having within the last three years excommunicated one manager who won a world's championship, another who furnished the runner-up in the league race and a third who was utterly unable to do better than the pennant, it might be interesting to know what Mr. Sam Breadon, of St. Louis, intends to do about Bill Southworth, who today has managed the Cardinals right down to the 500 mark.

There have been all manner of rumors this year about managers who are about to be beheaded. They say Russell Blackburn is breathing his last in Chicago and that old Jackie Atz from the Texas League will take over the White Sox in 1930. Out in Cincinnati, the directorate has asked the mugs to bear with Mr. Hendricks until the end of the year, at which time it promises to deal with him in a manner befitting his shame.

Robbie either is or isn't to go in Brooklyn, Maranville may be "sent in" with the Braves and Dan Howley, having made faces at Phil Ball, is said to be destined for Washington, where Walter Johnson is expected to retire at the termination of his one-year contract. Bill Killefer then is supposed to get Howley's job, the idea being that Mr. Ball doesn't like the faces Howley is making, which is fair enough. It is understood that Howley wasn't altogether sure whether he liked Mr. Ball's even before the face-making began.

Anyhow, in all the clamor, there hasn't been so much as a syllable to indicate whether or not Mr. Breadon's intentions toward Mr. Southworth are strictly kosher. However, with the Cardinals in fourth place and maybe going lower, it is assumed that William's job is safe.

Paulino Uzcudun Most Colorful Foreign Fighter to Enter Ring

Home Runs

A man who, as the fellow says, "loves life," swine game suits of clothes, about 900 neckties and almost as many shirts—that's Paulino Uzcudun, who is still the picturesque boxer from Spain's sunny slopes who was so badly beaten by Max Schmeling.

The former Basque woodchopped throws off plenty of color both in and out of the ring and is regarded as one of the most interesting men the Old World has contributed to the upper rungs of the realm of pugilism since the days of Charley Mitchell and Jim Mace, almost half a century ago.

Unlike Firpo, the South American who almost won the world's title when he battled Jack Dempsey out of the ring, Paulino is what is known as a "spender" and "good sport." He does not throw away his money in the fashions of some of the American champions of earlier days who always lived to regret their trodding of the primrose, but he "believes in the best."

He dresses in the height of fashion and his clothes are modeled from the most expensive and exclusive materials. He delights in "traveling in style" and maintains a retinue of assistants, trainers and traveling-companions.

The Spaniard's favorite sport is the so-called Cuban game of jai alai. He plays the game himself, but does not bet on his ability. He likes horse-racing but refuses to "play the ponies."

trial horse for most of the heavier aspirants to wear the crown tossed off by the intellectual Gene Tunney and who has battled most of the so-called heavyweight contenders, failed to attract much attention in New York until he caused Harry Wills, the negro, to fold up like a Japanese umbrella. The heavy punnelling that Mr. Paulino gave Wills caused the leading experts to turn to him immediately after the negro was assisted from the ring in the fourth round, unable to continue against the Spaniard's attack on his stomach.

After that the Basque was in a position to "talk turkey" to managers and promoters but he never fought for large purses until he met the German in the Milk Fund bouts. Previously his biggest purse was $40,000, which he received for his fight with George Godfrey, the Philadelphia negro.

Invests Money Paulino is not a millionaire, such as is classed Dempsey, Firpo and Tunney, but he is wealthy. He has invested most of his earnings in real estate in Spain.

HUMANIZE TRAPPING

Editor, The Herald,

Your readers are very likely following with interest the growing movement to humanize trapping. Some States have enacted laws controlling use of the steel trap and several have had the subject under consideration this year. Game Commissioners are many of them in sympathy with legal abolition of devices for the capture of furbearing animals which do not kill immediately or take unhurt. The public generally is coming to realize that present methods of trapping are inconsistent with modern notions of justice to the lower orders of life.

Those who have witnessed the agony of victims of the steel-trap need not be told that this instrument inflicts terrible suffering directly, and indirectly, distress from privation and cold. These facts are vividly depicted in a book entitled "From Thimblecrack to Steel-trap" which may be secured from the A. S. P. C. A., New York. Motion pictures of trapped animals plead their cause with pitiful eloquence. The protection of domestic animals from traps of all sorts is a problem in itself deserving attention. A recent newspaper reports the crushing of a boy's hand in a fox trap and that he experienced excruciating pain before extraction was possible.

A good many devices of a more humane description are already on the market. Among manufacturers are Humane Killer Trap Company, Austin, Pa., E. L. Hedson, Fletcherburg, Mass., and W. A. Gibbs, Chester, Pa. About a hundred traps were submitted to the American Humane Association, Albany, New York, in a recent contest. The Anti-Steel-Trap League, Washington, D. C., is offering prizes for humane inventions for use in trapping.

All interested in eliminating some of the world's avoidable suffering are urged to co-operate in promoting legislation aiming to do away with torturing traps. Connecticut has made some laws in this direction and it is hoped that her next Legislature will make general steps.

AS TO WOLCOTT QUARRY

Dear Sir:

I would like to correct a statement made in your issue of the late Michael Gorman's work. As to Mr. Gorman's purchasing the Wolcott quarry on the Buckland road. They never owned the quarry to my knowledge and I lived on the place for twenty or more years and when the place was sold to the late Adolph and Samuel Hartman purchased it from the owner, Charles O. Wolcott. The bridge on North Main street was built by a bridge builder from Pascoquo, R. I., and if my memory does not fail me the late O. Treat did the work on the Bridge street bridge.

Also Charles H. Owen did not discover the prehistoric animal in the stone. It was discovered by a workman by the name of Stoughton and he called Mr. Wolcott's attention to it. He in turn had Mr. Owen look at it, and through him, geologists from four universities, Yale, Harvard, U. of P. and Brown, I might also state in closing that should the bridge on Bridge street ever be removed or taken down the stone containing part of the fossil remains goes to Yale College by a vote of the town.

Thank you.

Respectfully yours,
 Frank M. Wolcott.

"Say, looky hya, Rastus, you know what you're doin'? You is goin' away for a week, and they ain't a stick of wood out fo' de house." "Well, what yo-all whinin' about, woman? I ain't takin' de ax!"

Some "don't get nuthin' out of life." But when their whines begin, We often can remind them that They don't put nuthin' in."

"DESERT SONG" AT STATE TOMORROW

Vitaphone Singing Romance Here Two Days; Tremaine's Aristocrats on Same Bill.

The wonders of the Vitaphone are presented in new guise in "The Desert Song," the brilliant operetta which takes its place as the first musical play ever transferred to the screen in its entirety. This beautiful and spectacular film production comes to the State theater for a special two day showing beginning tomorrow.

Wanted Brothers, pioneers of the talking picture, have taken another step forward in the production of this famous stage play accompanied by all the tuneful melodies of Sigmund Romberg, its composer, played by the Vitaphone Symphony Orchestra, and with a magnificent chorus of one hundred voices.

The use of such a large number of people brought up new problems in voice recording, but the difficulties were surmounted with complete and astonishing success, and the result was a Vitaphone production which far excels all previous efforts of this type.

"The Rif Song" and all the other inspiring choruses of "The Desert Song" come to the audience in volume as melodious as it is remarkable. The desert settings are exceptionally beautiful.

Filled with dramatic thrills and bubbling over with romance, "The Desert Song" is a story of the flaming sands of the Sahara. It is based on the book by Oscar Hammerstein, Oscar Harbach and Frank Mandel.

Important roles in this epoch-making film are played by John Boles, Carlotta King, Louise Fazenda, Johnny Arthur, Myra Loy, John Miljan, Otto Hoffman, Edward Martindel, Marie Wells and Robert E. Guzman. Roy Del Ruth directed and Harry Gates made the screen adaptation.

Paul Tremaine and his Aristocrats of Modern Music, one of the most popular dance orchestras of the middle west, will also be seen in a Vitaphone vaudeville presentation that fairly sparkles with vim and vigor.

Tremaine and his musicians, fifteen in all, offer some clever symphonic-jazz interpretations of new and up-to-date melodies that will put pep into tired feet.

McKay and Ardine, well known vaudeville stars, are featured in another Vitaphone act that is entertaining from start to finish. Both are clever artists and should please the most particular of movie fans—especially those who like something new and different.

Shorter subjects will also be shown.

Greater Stress on CORDIALITY

A Bigger Scope in MERCHANDISE

Strangely enough, the better store—a busier store because it is a better store—finds time to be cordial. It has the facilities of course that induce women to meet their friends here and all that sort of thing—but more important, it enjoys being hospitable.

Not only in size but in number of departments is it possible to gauge the size of this store and its existence. Think what products were available to you here thirty-two years ago—and how many more today.

KEEPING STORE two or three decades ago was a profession of dignity—and not too much strain on those engaged in it. The store of thirty-odd years ago, in its easy way, met the easy demands of its clientele. But styles and manners have changed with a revolutionized plan of locomotion. And now that all things move with the speed of a pin-wheel in a hurricane, the profession of store-keeping is no longer what it used to be. Measure today's successful store by the changes in its working plan over a number of years—by its adjustment to each new era—and by its readiness for what may break tomorrow.

The J. W. Hale Company aims to keep abreast of the times in the art of retail distribution. Starting Thursday each and every one of our thirty departments will contribute its full share of stylish and quality merchandise, celebrating thirty-two years of progressive store-keeping.
