The oft-debated and much-argued question concerning the official name of the new post office building now under construction at the Center was settled today with receipt of a letter from the First Assistant Postmaster General at Washington, in which he states that upon completion of the post office it will be designated as "Manchester." It was recently announced that the post office would be known as "South Manchester," but it was learned later that the plans of the building provided for the name of "Manchester." As a result, much discussion arose on the question and the Chamber of Commerce wrote to Washington, presenting many facts in favor of the name "Manchester." One Postmaster The letter received today from Arch Coleman, first assistant postmaster general, was in reply to a letter from the Post Office Department in which it was stated that in changing the name of any city and, inasmuch as South Manchester is included within the corporate limits of the city of Manchester, the new post office upon completion will be officially designated as "Manchester" at which time both offices will be consolidated under one postmaster.

would work is shown in the British experience. With the depreciation of the paper currency, the value of gold coin increased. Gold sovereigns with a par value of 20 shillings became worth 30 shillings. A corporation having obligations redeemable in gold or equivalent, therefore, would have had to pay about 50 per cent more. It has not been customary in England, however, to issue gold bonds, so that handicap was less important than it might be here. Great Britain's obligations in this country, nevertheless, were largely payable in gold or equivalent, so that it has been more costly for her to pay interest on her dollar bonds than before the lapse from the gold standard. Payable in Gold Not only has a large amount of both corporate and public debt issued in this country been made payable specifically in gold dollars of the present weight and fineness, or their equivalent, but at least one of the leading Wall street banks requests that all deposits accepted from its customers be payable in gold or equivalent. Bankers also point out that currency inflation does not necessarily, or automatically, bolster prices of commodities. In pointing up its claim, it points to the experience of the British experience, the pound has dropped in value more than 20 per cent, but "the economist" index of sterling prices has increased less than 4 per cent since the lapse from gold. In fact, one of the chief advantages to England from her slip from the gold standard has been due to the fact that sterling prices have not risen as much as sterling declined, for foreigners have been able to buy British goods in terms of the depreciated sterling more cheaply than before. "The chief benefit to England, therefore, has been to her export trade.

WORLD'S FINANCES NEED IMPROVING

(Continued from Page One) dent, emphasize that national monetary systems have become interdependent and that internationalism in monetary matters is an accomplished fact. Emergency Credits The central banks in the World Bank's capital centers and treasury advanced short term emergency credits in 1931 to the sum of five billion Swiss francs. This sum plus contributions by debtor markets and diminution of their central bank reserve permitted liquidation during the year of more than thirty billions in short term indebtedness. Such a vast movement of liquid funds, Mr. McGarrath said, played havoc with the financial world, "and the wonder is that the economic system was able to withstand such dislocating forces." The real consequence of the Hoover moratorium, he said, was utilization of the World Bank as a convenient center for relatively quick action in the international financial sphere. The stockholders approved Mr. McGarrath's recommendations for distribution of profits. They also approved his formal report which asserted that "in the emergency of the past year, central bank collaboration expressed itself most notably in the volume of inter-central bank advances which were made in a mutual effort to hold together the fabric of the international credit system."
