The teachers' card party last night at the Hollister street school was a distinct success, and an appreciable sum was realized for the shoe fund. Pivot bridge and whist was played and the prizes at each table were little potted ferns. Home made candy and punch was served. The candy was donated by children in the Hollister street school. Miss Hazel Lutz, art teacher, assisted by the other teachers and some of the children, made most attractive candy holders for each table in the form of sunflowers with brown centers and yellow leaves. Real yellow sunflowers and other brilliant fall flowers were used in the decoration of the auditorium. Some of the children contributed handkerchiefs with tating and other forms of hand work. These were also sold to help swell the fund.

LUCIANO WANTED TO BE LEFT ALONE
 Develops He Had Relatives; Told Them He Preferred Lonely Life.

Michael Luciano, found dead in his room in the Weldon building yesterday morning is not without relatives in this country, as was given on his report to the Hartford hospital, but instead has a half brother living in Manchester. He has been a resident of Manchester for the past 26 years, was not an Austrian, as he had told people, but was Italian by birth. He never served in either the Austrian or Italian armies it has been learned and it develops that he chose to live the life of a recluse setting up an air of mystery about his earlier life.

 He came to Manchester in 1908, having been employed in Hartford before that time and arrived in Manchester just after the strike at the velvet mills. He did not work in the velvet department, but instead worked in the dressing mill.

For a number of years he made his home with the Sordella family on Cottage street, later with Domenico Minicucci on Madison street. He also lived with his half brother, Nicholas Marcontonio, now living at 355 Center street. He decided he wished to live alone and for the past twelve years has been living in rooming houses.

Eight years ago, he told his friends in Manchester he had made a will and he had remembered
