One Of Last Tasks On Stand Removal of Shirt And Tie To Bare Weak Torso Before Carroll Murder Jury.

South Paris, Me., Aug. 6.—(AP)—The state's effort to convict former Deputy Sheriff Francis M. Carroll of the strangling of Dr. James G. Littlefield today became an attempt to prove Paul N. Dwyer, 19, Carroll's accuser, was incapable of moving the 65-year-old physician's body unaided.

The first week of the 43-year-old war veteran's trial came near an end with the state intent upon proving its newest contention, after three days' pitiless cross-examination of Dwyer—who charged Carroll with the crime for which Dwyer began a life sentence eight months ago after confessing he killed both the doctor and his 65-year-old wife, Lydia.

Mother Tells of Early Life

Janet N. Dwyer, mother of Carroll's accuser, was called to the stand as the second witness today and testified briefly about her son's early life. Her examination came to an abrupt halt when Judge William T. Fisher reminded Prosecutor Ralph Ingalls Dwyer merely was a witness and not a defendant.
