PRESTON GROVER

Washington. — Press excitement over the first opinion handed down by Justice Frankfurter cooled noticeably when the reporters began to read them. They were tough on the court. They are clear and sane in all essentials.

Academic! barked another. They are as thick as mud. Frankfurter seems to have big words. He was born with a three-syllable name for nothing. His first two opinions were headed to the garbage with exasperating terms.

Big words do not necessarily denote intelligence. Most of them are little ones for clear and quiet newspaper reading, without using a shade of the proper meaning, was an extra task that the reporters did not relish.

Take Special Skill. The United Supreme Court stories is almost an art in itself. The delicate balance of the opinions, the handling, some of them involving lengthy opinions. There is no time for lengthy reading. Court hours are noon and afternoon papers. "Headlines" are a dream in ten minutes after that. They want the gist of the case.

It means that the reporter must know the case, the law, the precedents, the points in a written opinion. The reporter must be able to write a judgment in that respect. He also says that the points of the decision at the end of the opinion.

The reporter could go right there and get the most for a quick, concise, incisive story. Reporters list Justice Black's opinions as easiest to handle of any on the court. They are clear and unembarrassed with the legal grammar that jurists often love.

Most Want For Douglas. Next to his in the reporters' estimates, come Chief Justice Hughes. Toughest and most alive are Justice Frankfurter's and Justice Brandeis. They both prefer a good curved ball to a fast one shot straight over the plate.

For many philosophical experts, "Bill" Douglas, the reporter probably will have to wait until next fall. The court's business for this season will be about wound newspaper reading, without using a shade of the proper meaning, was an extra task that the reporters did not relish.

JOHNNY BULL'S POLICY

FOLLOWS A 1907 MEMO

By MORGAN M. BEATTY. Special Staff Writer. Washington. — Two years of experience in appeasement and Neville Chamberlain goes back a full generation to the musty file of the British foreign office and learns a lesson in foreign policy.

The gold went on with a rock in 1918 when the boat struck a rock in the Channel. Chamberlain has successfully followed the same policy for balance of power in Europe, since exactly the same as the policy first proposed for Britain by the late and little advertised Sir Eyre Crowe, then counselor of the foreign office.

For you who have it on the word of Lord Noel-Buxton, who makes a business of studying foreign affairs, the British have wondered whether the Russians plan to let the last-mentioned states and the democracies have it out, and stand on the sidelines with a smile. But as Germany moves eastward, Russia may be tempted to take the game a little more seriously.

It will take time to prove whether Chamberlain's reasoning was right, or if at one time there has been a change of heart. The American still have the advice of the American strategists whose private opinion was sought on Hitler many, many months ago.

When a man takes a gun in hand, said the American, "I know of but one way to stop him. Chamberlain seems to look at it that way, too—now."

In his famous memorandum of 1907, Crowe advised that Great Britain was faced with a perilous dilemma. It was either to take a diplomatic line, or to take a more aggressive line. Chamberlain's reasoning was right, or if at one time there has been a change of heart.

Not that Sir Franklyn succeeded in toning down the British fondness for headlines. They still do it. The other night, I heard a Britisher bitterly complain that there wasn't a bar in the theater, pointing out that every London playhouse had one. They told the Britisher that Manhattan playgoers like to remain reasonably sober through the night. It didn't convince him.

The Londoners audibly cheer the crude American jargon that takes a whack and a sock, child with joy, instead of taking a little whack and a sock, child with joy, instead of taking a little whack and a sock, child with joy.

Now he frequents two or three village pubs where his credit is dubious, and on several occasions he literally has sung for the wages. A local paper on a paper tonight, he might observe the sign of a village pub where his credit is dubious, and on several occasions he literally has sung for the wages.

Nothing any witness could say would change my mind on the subject. Senator Roy Pittman, opponent of holding hearings, recently said: "I was wonderful."

John Crawford, describing date with husband Franklyn Tume, even in expected divorce.

We are not in our minds that the case is closed. The Prime Minister (Neville Chamberlain) is not the one to lead the nation.

It is Frederick Belloc, labor member of British Parliament, suggesting that Chamberlain resign, or that he should be removed from office.

You sleep people help to cheer up the very special and it is about time somebody stepped out of the line. Austria in setting aside traffic laws, which would have been a disaster.

Two or three decades ago, he reported, showed needed flaky base for their cravata, across their necks. They do not conduct their business as they should. The possession of genuine leather, and we believe, and no other worth his salt would act as a stimulant to the nation.

Many showmen of that era, say, the greatly comical Magee, used to be a great success. They were stepping aside for a

PATE HAS BIG PROBLEM TO REPLACE DON BUDGE

Davis Cup Team Captain Faces Task In Picking Squad For Defense Of Tennis Trophy, Reggs, Sabin Seem Best Prospects.

New York, April 7.—(AP)—Walter Pate, the little man who brought the Davis Cup back to these shores two years ago, has issued a call for volunteers to step one place to the fore and lead a team in retaining the elegant silver trophy.

Budge now is a professional and the chance of keeping the trophy depends very much on how well he can stir up interest now and then.

Pate is the captain of the Davis Cup team which will meet in Manila in the latter part of the year. He has a list of names of players who he thinks are suitable to replace Budge and Gene Mack.

Bobby Riggs, 2—Wayne Stain, 2—Gene Mack, 2—Elliott Mandel, 2—Sidney B. Wood, Jr., 2—Bobby Riggs, 2.

Riggs and Sabin are the best bets for the singles posts and Pate is looking for a double play with Wood and Mack as a double combination.

Wood never has been as good as he was in 1937 when he won the Wimbledon title, but Pate has had the New York's best strategy and judgment would team Wood with Mack's disability.

These four form an able enough combination, but one player, Riggs, will be the main attraction.
