will have "considerable forces" at his command. Meanwhile, although they had progressed to the suburbs of Leningrad, and were about to bomb the city, the Nazis still had Russian counter-attacks that to cope with. Yesterday, they were attacking the rear of the Russian lines, and soldier-reporter accounts from the front freely spoke of new Soviet troops equipped, continued operations, and new resistance from Odessa. That is, deathly, the record, no matter how many victories there have been, no matter how many "pockets" they have created, no matter how many planes their communications have destroyed, no matter how many prisoners they have taken, Russian resistance has always been resolute. There has not yet been a German victory which was not followed by a Soviet counter-attack.

In all the campaign of the Low Countries and France, there was never an Allied counter-attack. The reason for this was that it seemed obvious from the record, that the Russians were anywhere for this as no one else, had been so successful in their strikes. The German have been able to maintain their striking power, achieved unbounded flexibility of maneuver, unhesitating their equipment, whatever the future of that resistance may be, the headlines from June 22 to date speak for themselves.

On June 23, the Nazis had broken through to Minsk and created the "Blitzkrieg" trap. It was they who have been the "world imperial impact." They reported the Soviet Army in "chapters."

On July 4, what was described as the "Battle of Russia" had begun, along the Berezina River. On July 5, the Russians were reported to be standing firm. On July 6, the Russians, who were supposed to be in a state of chaos, counter-attacked. On July 8, the Nazis claimed the Germans were pressing forward again, and in another 24 hours they announced that the Stalin Line had been broken and they were going to "close before Kiev." This was July 12.

On July 15, the Nazis said they were pushing forward to Kiev. On the 18th, they claimed the occupation of Smolensk, and that Kiev was "menaced." On the 20th, they reported a new "pocket" at Smolensk, intimating that the road to Moscow was now open. On the 22nd, fighting was still continuing at Smolensk. A day later, they began advancing from Smolensk, and immediately they set out for the Soviet units, conducting a "counter-offensive." On Sunday, August 10, the world skeptically hailed a "Soviet surprise—six weeks of resistance" — the next day the Germans were trying to crush Kiev, and began a new advance, widening the Smolensk gap. On Aug. 6, they reported 12,145 Soviet tanks and 9,082 Soviet planes destroyed. On Aug. 8, they claimed a giant new trap in the Ukraine, enclosing 420,000 men, and "ringing nearer Leningrad" was recorded. On Aug. 18, came the news that most of the Red Armies in the Ukraine had escaped "intact." By Aug. 21 the Nazis were again going ahead "on three fronts." But when they were admitting a "major" counter-offensive.

SERIAL STORY
BRIDE FROM THE SKY
By HELEN WELSHIMER

The story of July Allen has been floating through the sky for some time. It was first reported by Grover A. Whalen, erstwhile police commissioner, while studying the oil shortage last Aug. 28th, at the request and direction of Mayor La Guardia.

His report is that there is a "real and serious" shortage of gasoline and fuel oil along the eastern seaboard, that moreover, the shortage is likely to last as long as the war does, and that railroad tank cars alone will not solve it. He recommends continued rationing, and that the rationing of the curfew, but insists that Mr. Ickes should immediately request gasoline quotas to conform to the seasonal demands of various communities. Using the vacation month of July as a basis for adjustment, he points out, gives a historical picture to many sections, and he is sure that it will not be a surprise when it is found that the rationing of the curfew, but insists that Mr. Ickes should immediately request gasoline quotas to conform to the seasonal demands of various communities.

Chapter XVIII
July pulled on the parachute with all her strength as the camels, down the rising sound of the motor following her, she knew that she could not be seen. Her eyes scanned the sky as she fell.

She saw a plane in the distance, and she knew that it was a transport plane. She saw a plane in the distance, and she knew that it was a transport plane. She saw a plane in the distance, and she knew that it was a transport plane.

Heard Along Main Street

And on Some of Manchester's Side Streets, Too

Rats have long been a problem for owners of buildings along Main street, especially in those buildings where sewer connections aren't well trapped. It's a pretty good bet that if the town ever built an air-tight shelter in the business place before any humane could reach it.

A good many owners have rid their properties of the pests by installing swinging baffles in the sewer outlets so that nothing can come into the building from the sewer system. In some cases cats have been furnished over a weekend in an attempt to drive them out.

The rat problem is not at all a recent one. Some years ago the menace became real serious. The rats ventured boldly out on Main street and their cost merchants considerable during a year because of the merchandise they destroyed. A local policeman advanced the key for riding the buildings of the rats. He brought a ferret down into one store cellar and left it there. The policeman asserted that in a few nights there wouldn't be a rat within miles.

All was serene for a couple of days but it was noticed there were still rats around the section. Investigation showed that the ferret was not only enjoying itself night by night on scraps of meat from a market, but it had actually made friends with the rats and was catching pieces of meat for them to eat.

Maybe that fellow who started to play a life in town court the other day was looking for a Pied Piper's job in town.

More than one resident of the town is interested in knowing where the Wilbur Cross Highway will go through town. It is expected of course that it will brush through the northwest section, but the exact lines have not been disclosed. State highway representatives are still searching for an effort to tie up options.

Miss Ritchie is to be married on Saturday, October 4 at the South Methodist church to Paul B. Averill of Middlefield street.

Whether the local Selectman got anywhere in his objections isn't yet known, but we've heard along the line that the state officials listened to his arguments and then just went ahead with their original plans.

It has been remarked that Chairman Dave Chambers of the Board of Selectmen is also interested in the new route because of a son's trucking business. A trucking concern in which young Chambers has an interest is said to be seeking a point along the proposed highway to be used as a transfer terminal.

Complaining about the acoustics in a certain public hall in town, a friend of ours was interrupted the other day by a courteous blitzer who asked "Why don't you go down to D'Amico's pool parlor on Oak street? He has just bought a dozen brand new cue sticks."

Democratic Registrar Ed Moriarty doesn't believe in counting votes before they're cast. He isn't one to sit down and concede a Republican victory in the town election on October 6 ten days in advance. At the Y. M. C. A. the other night when the Improvers and Y directors were talking over Mrs. Southern's swimming pool plan someone asserted that since there were some Selectmen present they should be asked their opinions.

But in counting among those present who might be called Selectmen some included Lawrence Converse. "Oh, no," Ed Moriarty objected, "he isn't a Selectman yet. Election day comes a week from Monday."

Judging from the comments heard on Main street, the bid that Assessors Hobenthal and Lewis are making to put their jobs on a full-time basis isn't popular among the taxpayers. Most property owners remember the last business boom in Manchester, and they remember all too well what followed.

The splurge in municipal spending that comes so readily with good times and high wages won't happen here in this time, most voters avoid unnecessary additional expenses now there will be that much less to correct when the let-down comes. That seems to be the general feeling around the town.

Revelation that the assessors here are well paid in comparison with those in other municipalities also tends to influence the voters in the belief that things are well enough in that department. No one abates very seriously the threat of Assessors Hobenthal and Lewis to resign if their wishes are not acceded to. No one is critical of their work. Both Hobenthal and Lewis are good assessors and Henry Mudge is a valuable man in his position, but it just doesn't seem to be logic to the average voter that the assessors in Manchester call for a full-time job for two men in addition to a clerk and a couple of stenographers.

Practical jokers are usually busy at the pasture all the time. A fellow who has it in his bones to play a trick on somebody just has to keep at it, day in and day out. One of these fellows couldn't resist the temptation the other day. A salesman chanced along trying to promote anchor-type wire fence. He wasn't making out very well in sales when along came Mr. Practical Joker.

We don't know whether an actual sale was made, but our jobster gave the salesman the names of two prospects. "If you want to make a sup-thing sale," he told

Dr. Underhill's Talk Tuesday

To Tell of Experiences During Fall of France; Benefit for Hospital.

"Occupied France" is the title of Dr. Samuel Underhill's lecture which he will deliver at Center church house, Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 for the benefit of the work of the Manchester Memorial Hospital Women's Auxiliary.

Dr. Underhill, a graduate of the Harvard Medical school, visited France in 1918 for the first time. After the first World War and his marriage to Miss Edith Cheney of this town, he returned with Mrs. Underhill and they enjoyed their home at St. Albans, France, for a number of years. Since the invasion of that country by the Germans, they have had many terrifying experiences, and their own home was bombed and partially destroyed. He will tell first hand stories of the flight of the refugees, the peasants, ahead of the Hitler hordes.

Those who are close to the leading members of the Italian colony in Manchester sympathize with them deeply in the situation they are in. The great majority of Italians in town do not like Italy's part in the Axis arrangement. Here and there you find one who is strong for Mussolini, but they are practically one hundred per cent against the Hitler party.

What really hurts Italians here are bombs and bullets. They are not of the Italian race, but their own people are. They suffer as much as the Italian people. They are not of the Italian race, but their own people are. They suffer as much as the Italian people.

When Al Jolson played the Bushnell Memorial last Wednesday night he made reference to an incident that was appreciated particularly by one man in the audience. A Manchester man, Postmaster Tom Quish, in his estimate chat with the audience Jolson referred to Dick Barthelme, noted star of the silent movies. Jolson mentioned that Barthelme was in the audience at one of the musicals he had played in the old Parsons theater.

Tom Quish was with Dick Barthelme the night Jolson referred to. Both were students at Trinity College. Barthelme persisted in heckling Jolson and Al stopped his routine and asked "Do you think you could do better?" Barthelme said "Yes" and started to climb up on the runway from which Jolson used to work in his old shows. Ted Hudson, famed Trinity footballer, was also in the party and prevented Barthelme from getting up on the stage.

At a subsequent Jolson appearance in Parsons Al recalled the incident and said he had received a letter from a Manchester man about it. The Manchester man was Tom Quish. The local postmaster asked Jolson to sing a favorite song. And Jolson did accommodate Quish by singing Tom's favorite, "Rockabye My Baby to a Dixie Lullaby."

We were aware that this column is well read in Manchester, but we received rather a pleasant surprise today when we were apprised of the fact that not only was our chat "heard along Main street" but along Pennsylvania avenue in the Nation's capital as well.

Last week we remarked that Doc Dolan, former local Democratic leader, had taken an interest in the Manchester post office. Doc read the article and dropped The Herald a line to deny any connection with the local postmaster situation. His letter reads as follows:

"I have just read 'Heard Along Main Street.' It looks like the writing of the finest and ablest newspaperman in Connecticut—Alan O'Rourke.

The story, however, has no truth because when the caucus rejected me in Manchester I divorced myself from politics in that town. Who is to be postmaster depends 100 per cent on Civil Service and Congressman Koppelman. I have nothing whatsoever to do with either a candidate or the naming of the postmaster.

"Remembering all the kind things you have done for me, believe me to be

"Sincerely yours, "Ed Dolan," Dr. Dolan is Register of the Treasury and hasn't been in close touch with Manchester for some time. However, we do know positively that Dr. Dolan visited the Post Office Department in Washington in the interests of a certain local candidacy. Perhaps his visit wasn't a success, but his letter certainly puts the bee right on Herman Koppelman in the local postmaster situation.

The Building Trend

Up to a little over a decade ago house building was a pretty cut and dried proposition. Moderately priced house plans provided very little choice and the average job was handled by the contractor with very little actual drawing done as far as plans were concerned. He built from past experience.

All this has now gone by the board and then some. There are any quantities of smart plans on the market complete with specifications or you can have them adapted by a local architect to meet your particular requirements. There is a new and wide choice of materials for housing construction unheard of 20 years ago.

The desire for speed in producing a finished house has brought out many new construction methods that have cut time and costs.

Altogether housing has become a specialized job with much of the specialty work done on a quantity production basis by machinery—and producing a better job than was done by hand.

Keeping up to modern construction methods calls for modern thinking and accurate business methods.

We have entered the contracting business and built up an organization that has a full knowledge of the revolutionary changes that have taken place. We are in active competition for construction work of all kinds—industrial, commercial and housing and we are getting a good proportion of it.

Work is being done on a sound and satisfactory basis that books repeat orders.

Before you let that contract let this organization give you a figure. You can be assured that the job will be finished to your satisfaction.
