Designed to place home ownership within easy reach of the average wage earner, to stabilize interest rates to improve the quality of housing, and to provide a steady flow of private capital for home financing, the Federal Housing Administration's home-financing system provides a number of protective features to home buyers.

Among the benefits which the FHA program offers the 1. The low initial payment on the house. 2. The maintenance of uniformly low interest rates, FHA regulations establish this rate at a maximum of 412 per cent, plus the mortgage-insurance premium of one-half 3. The long term of repayment, which may be up to 20

4. The inclusion of all charges in a single regular monthpayment. These include interest, principal, insurance, 5. FHA's insistence on sound construction and location standards and neighborhood requirements which assure, insured mortgages are durably built in communities of established value and under general conditions that promse stability and usefulness of home and neighborhood over a long period of years. 6. The single long-term mortgage which wraps up in one package the whole home-mortgage debt, paid off on a monthly basis and therefore not subject to the same hazards as the old short-term mortgage usually renewable at exorbitant costs. 7. The assurance, largely a result of the FHA's careful scrutiny of the borrower's financial status, that the mortgage debt is safely within the mortgagor's capacity to 8. Assurance that the FHA-insured mortgage does not involve hidden charges and tricky costs sometimes charac-
