Trying to Stimulate Thinking That Will Make for Lasting Peace—Pleased by Reaction.

By James Marlow and George Dielis
Washington, Oct. 1.—(AP)—Vice President Henry Wallace, asked to explain the reasons behind his many speeches about the "common man" said today that: "He is trying to stimulate thinking that will make for a lasting peace through giving the common man everywhere a better living which would include better wages, food and housing."
"I have felt," he said in an interview, "that a great many things were apt to be passed up too long if we are going to end war. For that reason I have made these speeches. They needed to be made and I will continue to make them."
Asked if he thought his talks were having any effect, Mr. Wallace said:
"Yes, I have been pleased by the reaction seen in the mail I receive and the folk I have met in different cities. There has been a good reaction in foreign countries, too, principally in England and Latin America."
He said he believes that the "so-called right wing trend in this country has aroused Latin American fears of a revival of dollar diplomacy" and that it is important "to the future to put these fears of Yankee imperialism at rest."
Potentialities Not Yet Realized
A modern democracy must respect the "individuality and potentialities of the common man," he said in his book-lined Senate office, "but those potentialities haven't yet been realized in any country."
There has been criticism of his vice president for his thinking and utterances, ranking from something like "star-gazer" to descriptions less complimentary, but of his critics he said:
"I have always felt they were valuable. They have been to me, by arousing discussion, they give you a power to get across your ideas that sometimes you may not possess yourself."
But criticism is valuable only so long as it is "fair," he said, "expressing 'resentment against distortions' of his words and thinking."
The vice president, who said he writes his speeches in longhand and dictates them to a secretary, called this the "century of the common man" in a May, 1942 speech in which he made this statement:
"When we begin to think about the significance of freedom from want for the average man, then we know that the revolution we have completed, either here in the United States or in any other nation in the world."
He made successive similar speeches.
Last July, as chairman of the Board of Economic Warfare, quarreled with Commerce Secretary Jones, head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, over the work of their agencies.
President Roosevelt settled the argument by abolishing the board under that name and with Mr. Wallace's chairmanship, leaving him to other important position except his vice presidency.
Those who may have thought when the vice president might resign the role of many vice presidents before him—an almost fan-like public life except when presiding over the Senate—were mistaken, for more than ever before he has made speeches around the country.
Must Break Bottlenecks
Particularly he attacked business monopolies and international cartels and today he said he considers both "bottlenecks that must be broken" before the kind of living he has in mind for the average man can be achieved.
Mr. Wallace pointed out that his speeches have fallen into two categories, foreign and domestic post-war goals, with most recent emphasis on how they are to affect this country.
He emphasized that "post-war full employment of labor, technology and natural resources in the service of the common man" had been and would continue to be the essence of his speeches.
Such talks, he claimed, help both the war effort and this country's relationship with other nations.
Better living standards, he said, should be thought of in terms of a national income of at least 120 billion dollars a year on the basis of current prices.
"Toward achieving those better standards," he said, "we have done better than any other large country in the world but still we have far to go."
But thinking of that post-war life in the United States without thinking also of how it should be propose and champion and support the big point of view. The truth is that unless America does propose and champion, no one else is likely to. Others, too, will continue the old-style game easily at hand.

The truth, too, is that what America means, what America can propose, what America can champion, is still in the hearts of the American people. The truth is that the American people themselves are ready to light a beacon on the Potomac which can be seen across the Atlantic.

The truth is that the American people are themselves spiritually, intellectually, politically prepared to play a straight, open, spirited, adventurous game on the world board.

The truth is that the only thing that could possibly hold the American people back from the game of bluff and bluster and expedient swag which will never be a match for the American people. The truth is that the American people are ready to play a straight, open, spirited, adventurous game on the world board.

Rationing News
By Anthony F. Arpaia, Director
Office of Price Administration

Connecticut retailers, housewives and workers mounted a big offensive against the Black Market in 14 cities and towns throughout the state. They have banded together to prevent the Black Market from infiltrating their homes and their lives.

The broad and intensive campaign is designed on the general principle of the action that started on the Bridgeport front a few months ago and which has since spread to other parts of the state. It is a campaign to have the Black Market eradicated from the state.

These folks realize that every Black Market operator is selling part of the community stock pile of scarce goods to keep the Black Market from being eliminated. They are willing to pay fancy prices. Twenty per cent of our limited gasoline supply is being used to supply the Black Market.

The mayors have responded by appointing a Citizens' White Market Committee. This committee has been composed of retailers, labor, housewives, and civic leaders. These committees are out to get that large bloc of honest folks who are being misled by the Black Market.

In Bridgeport, to take more than 32,000 people have signed the Home Front Pledge and filed it with the local War Price Rationing Board. Here is what they have promised:

Not to pay more than legal ceiling prices. Not to accept rationed goods without surrendering ration stamps.

Hundreds of Bridgeport retailers, even more anxious than their customers to keep the Black Market out of town, have taken the pledge. They will not knowingly sell goods above the legal ceilings. They will not sell rationed goods without getting ration stamps.

You can identify the pledgees by the Home Front Pledge posters displayed in their stores.

However, if you and I are going to do our part in keeping the Black Market out of town, we must know exactly what the top listings are for any given commodity.

This information is readily available in the Home Front Pledge book. You will find it in the official OPA Bulletin, which is available at every rationing board. Every honest retailer keeps posted for your protection.

Another thing... a new community ceiling price list, covering rationed goods, has been compiled this week. This list will help you to know the top legal price of such articles for their community.
