THE flags pictured here may be stronge to you, but they are all American banners-predecessors and, in the case of the three below, direct ancestors of today's Stars and Stripes, as described in "Flags of All Nations," by Cleveland H. Smith and Gertrude A. Taylor. During the Revolution the colonies had their own flags. One of the most popular symbols was the pine tree, used in many variations, two of which are pictured above. At left is the Massachusetts Navy flag, almost identical with that used on Washington's six warships. Next to it is the Bunker Hill flag, with the red cross of St. George in the canton and a pine tree in the corner of the cross. At upper right is the Bedford flag, carried by the Minute Men of that city at the battle of Concord. First real ancestor of our present national flag is the Grand Union flag, at lower left, flown over Washington's headquarters near Cambridge on January 1, 1776. Use of the British Union Jack indicates that the colonists then had no thought of separating from the mother country. But after the Declaration of Independence, the Union Jack was ousted and the first United States flag, center, below, made by Betsy Ross, appeared. It was made official by the first Flag Act. June, 1777. Admission of two new states called forth the second Flag Act, creating a flag with 15 stripes. This was the "Star-Spangled Banner" that flew over Fort McHenry in September, 1814, and inspired Francis Scott Key. As the country grew, the practice of adding a stripe for every new state was obviously impractical, so the third Flag Act
