By The Associated Press
Four persons died violently in Connecticut Sunday, two of them women.

The body of a woman identified as Mrs. Mary Rembo, 47, of Apartment 210, Yellow Hill, village, Bridgeport, was found in a bathtub on Crescent avenue near Seaview avenue shortly before midnight.

Severals of Paul Flay
The body remained unidentified for several hours. Police found the woman's purse, hat and shoes behind a neighbor about 75 feet from the body.

Mrs. Lillian McKay of 24 Clinton street celebrated her 80th birthday last evening with a dinner party at her home with her children and grand children.

Mrs. Donna C. Malafro, 36, was found dead in the basement of her Stratford home with what medical examiner here called a "self-inflicted bullet" wound through her chest that she was found on the floor of a pine panel room which held the gun collection of her husband, Albert.

Members of Ward Cheney Camp and Auxiliary U.S.W.V. are asked to gather at Watkins Funeral Home at 7 p. m. tomorrow for a memorial service for the late Joseph J. Behrend, past commander who died today.

The regular monthly meeting of the Deacons society will be held at the Emanuel Lutheran church on Wednesday at 8 o'clock.

Laud Features Of Labor Law

AFL Leaders Steering Clear of Any Direct Comment, However

Miami, Fla., Jan. 31.—(AP)—Over 100 American Federation of Labor leaders opened their midwinter meeting today privately lauding many features of the administration's new labor law proposals.

Members of the AFL Executive Council steered clear of any direct comment until the council currently studies the proposals.

But they obviously were happy over such features as the prohibition of the ban against the union membership traditional with many old-line AFL craft unions and the prohibition of many forms of Taft-Hartley court injunctions.

Actually, the council decided to wait until the AFL Executive Council meets in Washington next week to discuss the proposals.

AFL President William Green said that the AFL had wanted a "two package" approach to the new labor law proposals.

Green said: "We will give this single package very careful study, and our counsel will have to check it before we can say we support it."

The Stalin Interview

It is the task of the staff administration of President Truman and Secretary of State Dean Acheson to make peace with Russia...

That being so, the question is one of how it is going to be done, and of what positive gains—beyond the mere avoidance of war—are going to be achieved in the process.

Except in one respect, Prime Minister Stalin's reply to four questions by an American news agency is of little assistance in promoting this quest for peace.

Two of the questions themselves are almost silly, which was not Stalin's fault. There is little news in any of his answers.

The first question asked whether the Russian government would be "prepared to consider" the issuance of a joint declaration with the United States asserting that the "respective governments have no intention of resorting to war."

This is a silly question. Stalin's answer was, of course, that Russia would be "prepared to consider."

The second question asked whether Russia would be prepared to join with us in carrying out measures designed to implement this pact of peace, such as general disarmament.

The third question asked whether Stalin would be prepared to confer with President Truman at a mutually suitable place to discuss the possibility of concluding such a pact of peace.

There is nothing new here, either. In short, it was not western diplomacy which was propounding these questions, and Prime Minister Stalin, in his reply, offered no new concrete proposals on the part of eastern diplomacy.

The only significant thing in the whole affair, then, comes down to this: that it means something that Prime Minister Stalin should have chosen to answer this particular set of questions, from all those being submitted to him periodically, and to do it at this particular time.

It is the question of what is behind this Stalin move, and the further question of whether whatever may be there can be brought forward into a more concrete, specific, and realistic diplomatic discussion, which should concern our

State Department. It is comforting to note that the first reaction of the State Department was in this vein, and avoided either counter-attack or gush.

And what are the threats for the United States in this: that our occupation policy in Japan has been a magnificent success for maintaining order and for giving a new face impression of calm efficiency, but that this superficial success has been obtained at the price of abandonment of our own real objectives.

We are now reconstituting Japan more than we are reconstituting Japan. And as has previously been noted by various writers, to reconstitute pre-war Japan may be to lose the rest of post-war Asia.

This was a survey of Connecticut campaign trends indicated a spotty year for the Community Chests of the state. Six Community Chest fund drives achieved over 90 per cent of their drive quota.

On the other hand, four drives fell short of their quota, and 10 per cent of those latter cases, there has been hand-picked and designated as a result. Some of the services normally financed by the Community Chest Drive have had to be cut, in a manner which will actually mean a decrease in services previously rendered by various organizations.

And in one of Connecticut's largest cities, two of the major hospitals have just announced their withdrawal from membership in the Community Chest.

But it is this question, that of relinquishing all claim to funds from last October's fund drive except those funds especially designated for their donors.

In return, they gain their own freedom to campaign for themselves in the future. At the same time, in this particular case, the withdrawal of the hospital Chest drives is being forced to accept budget cuts which, in the words of the President, mean "the loss of very essential services to the children and working mothers and the ill and aged."

Now we do not know the reason for the inability of various Chest campaigns to come within practical reach of their drive quotas. One could say that it was a general trend toward lighter pocketbooks and less generous contributions.

We suspect that a deeper and more accurate diagnosis may be this: that there is a law of diminishing returns which applies to the Chest form of appeal because the individual organizations have gradually lost their identity and their individual appeal when merged into one fund-collecting practical reach of their drive quotas.

Whatever the reason for the hard sledding some Community Chests have been having in recent years, there is one evident after result. It is that decline in income imposes a strain which tends to produce the disintegration of the Chest system itself.

Organizations which cannot afford to take the budget cuts of the established distribution of drive funds would indicate leave the Chest and resume campaigning for themselves. And when that happens, a community is back, where it started.

The underlying principle beneath such experience may be, we think, that charity is something which organized, but it loses its heart, when it loses its heart.

Japanese Election. We are afraid that General MacArthur and others who have hailed the outcome of the recent election in Japan as a "victory for democracy" have either had tongue in cheek or didn't know what they were talking about.

For what has happened in Japan is that democracy, the reasonable middle way of life, has lost ground to two extremes.

It was good news that the election did not show too much of the good ground being occupied by the other extreme—that of the reactionary right.

It was this same reactionary right which so dominated the party structure of Japan that it was able to take Japan into war. Coming back into power, it tends to swing the balance to the ideals of the American occupation. But the people of Japan know that, politically, they are back where they were before the Communists, who represent the American-style, has taken its lick-

Ching Sees Labor Mediation Change 'Step Backwards'

Head of Federal Agency Says Reputation For Impartiality Likely to Suffer If Return to Labor Department Decided

Washington, Feb. 1.—(AP)—Cyrus S. Ching, head of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, told Congress today it would be a "step backwards" if his own independent agency is put under the Labor department.

He said the service's reputation for impartiality would suffer, and that the return to the Labor department would be a "step backwards" in the mediation process.

Ching's views were expressed in a letter to the Senate Labor and Pensions Committee, which is studying the proposed change.

The service was established in 1947 as an independent agency, but was transferred to the Labor department in 1948.

Ching said that the service's reputation for impartiality is one of its greatest assets, and that it would be damaged if it were placed under the Labor department.

He also said that the service's independence is essential for it to be able to mediate between labor and management.

Ching's letter comes at a time when the Senate is considering a bill to transfer the service back to the Labor department.

The bill, which was introduced by Senator McClellan, would transfer the service to the Labor department effective July 1, 1949.

Ching's letter is one of several that have been received by the committee in opposition to the bill.
