LIFE MAGAZINE TOLD HIS STORY

BILLY GRAHAM BUSHNELL MEMORIAL HARTFORD TONIGHT 7:30 P. M. FREE ADMISSION

The concert eventually was held January 21, 1949, and on the next day Draper and Adler sued. In their complaints they charged there was no truth in Mrs. McCullough's statements that they were "open supporters" of organizations listed officially as Communist fronts.

Mrs. McCullough maintained in her answering brief that her remarks were either true or privileged fair comment.

Under the law that applies, Draper and Adler must prove that the statements were untrue, malicious, and actually caused loss before they can collect damages.

Court officials, foreseeing difficulty in getting a jury, prepared a list of 63 venuemen — almost twice as many as for an ordinary trial. Estimated length of the trial: length were from four to five weeks.

Class at Lincoln Host to Parents

Lincoln School sixth graders in Mrs. Daisy Hill's room entertained their parents last Friday afternoon with a program of music, square dancing, and summaries of their work accomplished during the winter months.

Oliver Swain and Bruce Williams served as announcers for the varied and interesting program. Musical numbers included several songs by the class, piano solos by Sherman Fivotskiy and Charlotte Fayle, and a violin solo by Ruth Hanford.

An original puppet show was presented by Thomas Haddell, Kenneth Provost, and Robert Lewis. The square dances, which were both enthusiastically executed as well as received, were Solomon Levi, Pop goes the Weasel, and Captain Jack.

Baton twirling was demonstrated by Charles Bettinger and Bruce Williams.

Carol Johnson explained to the parents what has been done with the pupils with book reports. Geography and history programs were reported by Elaine Bucarno and Thomas LaForge. Language activities were described by Ruth Hanford.
