Whati Doing at UNITED AIRCRAFT?

America is involved in another emergency, and once more industry is demonstrating that the task of producing materiel for the armed forces is not confined to just a few contractors. It takes big, medium-sized and small ones. Each draws on the special skills and products of the other to do the job at hand. National defense is everybody's business.

Nowhere is the need for such teamwork more clearly recognized than in the aircraft manufacturing industry. But it is not teamwork desperately assembled at the beginning of a crisis and quickly disbanded when the crisis is passed. It is practiced in peace, as well as in time of national emergency.

For example, United Aircraft has been in the business of building airplanes, aircraft engines, helicopters and propellers for many years. And since it started doing business it has fostered, as a matter of policy, a close working relationship with many companies - large and small. They feed into our plants parts and equipment which we incorporate in the finished products. Other companies supply goods and services which every industry needs to keep operating.

In East Hartford, Pratt & Whitney Aircraft and Hamilton Standard are stepping up production to meet military requirements. And they are drawing on the skills and products of thousands of their peacetime suppliers to help complete the wartime job on schedule.

WHAT PERCENTAGE OF OUR SUPPLIERS

CAN BE CLASSIFIED AS SMALL BUSINESS?

but we can supply a good clue. For instance, of approximately 2,300 New England companies serving United Aircraft, more than 1,900 have fewer than 500 employees. That would place about 85 percent of them in the "small business" class. One company employs only 10 persons, including the owner, and its place of business is a garage. Some of our suppliers are former United Aircraft employees who decided to strike out for themselves and become businessmen. All have one thing in common, besides the label "small business". They all have the know-how to help us carry out our military assignments in this national emergency

Yes, the combination of big and little business in harness is unbeatable. In a national emergency, such as the one we are now facing, this kind of teamwork really pays off. With the team working smoothly, United Aircraft is prepared to handle, quickly and efficiently, any task assigned by the military services,

HOW MANY COMPANIES CALL UNITED AIRCRAFT "CUSTOMER"?

2,284

Pratt & Whitney Aircraft and Hamilton Standard, our divisions in East Hartford, buy goods and services from 5,243 companies in 39 states throughout the nation. A large number of them sup ply parts and equipment used in aircraft engines and propelle installations. But the two divisions also buy just about every thing you can name, from walnut shells to printing, from paper clips to power. Of companies which call us "customer", 1,582 are right here in Connecticut and 2,284 are in New England states. t is an industrial team that works well in peace, and is particularly effective in a national emergency.

HOW MUCH OF EACH UNITED DOLLAR IS PAID OUT TO OTHER COMPANIES?

☐ 23 Cents? ☐ 33 Cents ? ☐ 43 Cents?

DOES BIG BUSINESS HELP LITTLE BUSINESS GET MORE BUSINESS?

Yes?

Among our suppliers are many companies which must work to extremely fine tolerances on some products we buy. It is a matter of record that many of these companies, having earned reputations for quality production in aviation, are esgerly sought out by non-aviation manufacturers who want the same high quality. This helps these companies to prosper in peacetime, and to pre-serve skills and manufacturing techniques essential to our na-
