Says Radioactive Iodine Effective in Cancer Cases

Los Angeles, March 14.—(AP)—Radioactive iodine, "probably more than anything else at this moment," offers hope in combating inoperable cancer of the thyroid gland, says Dr. Earl R. Miller, noted radiologist.

Miller is professor of radiology at the University of California School of Medicine and consultant in radiology for the U. S. Veterans hospital in San Francisco, the U. S. Public Health Service and the San Francisco Public Health Service.

He addressed a convention of 2,500 doctors, sponsored by the Alumni Association of the medical school, College of Medical Evangelists on the use of iodine 131 in diagnosis and treatment of hyperthyroidism. The annual six-day convention opened Sunday.

Miller, in a press conference yesterday, described this use of radioactive iodine in attacking inoperable cancerous tumors in the thyroid area.

Most of the normal thyroid gland in the neck is removed by surgery. Radioactive iodine is then administered orally. Iodine has an affinity for thyroid tissue and seeks that area. If the tumorous masses pick up the radioiodine, they become normalised—that is, they cease to be malignant.

Miller said that the iodine is effective in the treatment of hyperthyroidism, or goiter, in many cases replacing surgery.
