Washington, March 2—(AP)—By an 8 to 6 vote, the Senate Foreign Relations committee today wrote into the Eisenhower administration's anti-slavery resolution a pronouncement that World War II agreements made with Russia are still open to question.

It also appeared to foreshadow a bitter debate when the resolution comes up on the Senate floor. Senate Republican leader, Charles McNichols, said the resolution didn't mean a floor fight, but "there would be a floor fight, anyway."

McNichols said that the resolution would have a "bitter" effect on the administration's relations with Russia. He said the resolution would "mean a floor fight, anyway."

The Cure Is Urgently

With Senator McCarthy and his associates, the House is engaged in a desperate struggle to keep their investigation from becoming permanent.

No Sobering Effect. Atomic energy may be a dread and tragic force but we have had it long enough now to begin to realize that it is not, of itself, a menace to mankind.

The obvious answer to this problem, toward which President Eisenhower himself has been leading the more or less openly, is to claim for the executive department of government the right to police itself.

One of the measures the Eisenhower administration has now put forward seems to accord this particular danger. It is an order from Joseph M. Dodge, Eisenhower's able Director of the Budget, to all the employees in his department.

"One of the fundamental obligations of each member of the bureau staff," the order states, "is to protect himself and the rest of the organization against the disclosure of information which is confidential or which is in violation of the effective operation, security and standing of the whole group."

"Knowledge of anything of this kind should come from within the group and not from without. Any investigation of such a situation should originate with the group and should not be brought on it from outside sources."

"Any member of the staff who has well founded information indicating that a continuation of an existing course of action is illegal, improper or detrimental to the interests of the organization is expected and instructed to report this."

Swifter Than Camera Eye. We now have called and distinguished proof of the old theorem that the hand is quicker than the eye.

"This is not," the order states further, "an invitation for snooping or gossiping. It is a reminder that an important responsibility of each member of the organization is to protect and further the constructive interests of the whole group."
