Before, After

Some of the most recent, intelligent, and potentially peace-building thinking of our time was once done by the late John Foster Dulles. He did it all, and to say the period before he became official secretary entrusted with the opportunity to do something about what went on in the world. But the moment such official opportunity became heading his way, his thinking and his ideas seem to change almost completely, and he is soon doing, as actual policy, some of the very things he himself, in his earlier capacity, had warned against doing.

Watching this happen was a fascinating and discouraging experience. But, in our more reasonable moments, we tempered our criticism. Responsibility is a privilege, as well as an opportunity, and sometimes its walls are thicker than those who enter them suspect.

The main point is that it always seems such a tragic loss when the divorce between private convictions and public practice seems so marked and extreme. Why is it, one wonders, that the ideas of hope and reason cannot survive translating from one arena to the other?

If the career of Dulles provided an example that was sad and discouraging, that of another American individual, not quite as prominent, but also identified with foreign policy, might be described as sad and encouraging.

In James J. Wadsworth, who first came into the public eye as our negotiator in the early stages of the Geneva talks on cessation of nuclear testing, and who then tried in as our ambassador at the United Nations after Henry Cabot Lodge resigned to run for vice president, we have a somewhat different kind of example. The difference between official and private behavior. Wadsworth went through the mill of official responsibility first, and has now emerged into the comparative liberty of expressing his own personal beliefs and theories.

He had, to give him credit in his official capacities, done what he had to do with a great degree of moderation and restraint, but never carried with himself the strong brand of international soap box oratory which was Lodge's great specialty, and which often found Lodge saying things he himself did not really believe. But, in the main, of course, he had to be guided by Washington, and was.

The moment he was released from official responsibility, he seemed to know exactly what he wanted to do. This was to become president of the Peace Research Institute, an organization dedicated to the task of making peace seem something more than something people sometimes talk about and never do anything about.

In his public pronouncements from this position, Wadsworth is beginning to sound the benefits that would be people in office and in responsibility to sound.

He asks questions like: "Is our national security destined to rest for all time solely on our armament capability and deterrent strength?"

Jamaica's Farewell

Recent visits to the Caribbean have had a certain resemblance to the situation in the Congo. A new nation, the West Indies Federation, was about to be born, having been promised its future independence by Britain next May. But, in advance of this supposedly happy event, the biggest and wealthiest island in the group, the island of Jamaica, voted to pull out of the federation. The vote against the federation was by a narrow margin, which may be reversed later on. But the immediate result, at least, is to darken the outlook for the West Indies Federation as a whole, to raise the question of whether the federation will be more than a mere political union.

Jamaica, with more than half the population of the proposed federation, and more than half the territory, was to have only 17 of the 45 seats in the federation parliament, and was not to have the federation's capital city either.

Jamaica had some reason to feel that it was losing more than it was gaining. Then, by remaining in the federation, but the Jamaica decision, if it is adhered to, may be more than anybody hopes.

Early population statistics, for instance, for some Caribbean islands, give the illusion that the figures set down under the names of the islands were really the numbers of persons who had been in the islands since the time of their settlement.

But just as the United States, acting through the United Nations, was concerned over what might come in to fill a possible political vacuum in the Congo, so Washington is also concerned with the possibility of a political vacuum in the Caribbean. If this island does not emerge as a stable political unit, they might expect that to infection picked up by every sea breeze that passes over Cuba. It might be Castro who infiltrates the vacuum, if one develops.

Self-determination, as when the Jamaicans voted to split a piece of the political picture which had been set up for the West Indies Federation, or as when later on some elements in the federation might choose to dip their politics into Castroism, can have its drawbacks.

Lux Impediments

If the additional survey of traffic conditions which is now in progress is to find out why the town's new traffic light has created more trouble and traffic jam than ever existed before it was installed, it may be that the cause of the trouble is not the traffic light but the fact that it has been installed in a location which will not work.

Wonders of the Universe Power Plant Planned For Men on the Moon

By DR. I. M. LEVIT, DIRECTOR OF THE FRANKLIN Institute. A tremendous step forward in providing the first astronaut with the moon with power to permit life in familiar surroundings was achieved with the announcement that a nuclear power plant has been designed for use on the moon. The first men on the moon will be there for a very short time (probably only a few hours); the energy required will be so small that it can be obtained from high-efficiency batteries brought along for the earth, for relaying television pictures back to the earth, for activating a small kitchen and for powering instruments.

Decorative Sense Gives This House Distinction

Heralding Homes

By MARGE FLYNN

An Early American heritage combined with a creative decorating sense lend individuality and distinction to the colonial-type development home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard L. Hull at 34 Marion Dr. The seven-room, two-story colonial, painted with white trim and white chime, is furnished throughout with New England antiques. Some originated in the Hull family; most have been collected during 18 years of marriage.

The oldest piece is a pine oval cupboard, circa 1760s, with a later panel and a paneled door in the dining room. The cupboard, which was removed from a colonial home in Northampton, Mass., had eight coats of paint—all different colors—which the present owners stripped down to the wood.

The most recent acquisition, also in the dining room, is an apothecary-type chest with cornice top and drawers. The dining table is not an antique, but was made by the present owners. Four Hitchcock-type pink seat chairs surround the table.

Unusual Bedding Asked how this antique collection began, Mr. Hull replied, "I started as a collector. He had grown up in an antique store. The dining table is not an antique, but was made by the present owners. Four Hitchcock-type pink seat chairs surround the table."

He credits his wife, however, with having become knowledgeable about antiques by observation and studying. Mrs. Hull stated that she began her collecting in 1943, when she visited an antique dealer in Boston who had collected a number of items in his collection.

Another expression of personal taste is the driftwood coffee arrangement field, a hobby of the past several years. She has collected a number of items in his collection.

Driftwood Collector On another small table, miniature wooden bird ornaments are perched realistically on driftwood.

Carefully Chosen Mrs. Hull provided an appropriate background for early American antique furniture by careful selection of wallpapers. A black and white patterned paper was used in the dining room, a red and white patterned paper in the living room, and a blue and white patterned paper in the kitchen.

Richard ("Mike") Hull, 16, of Waterbury, is a member of the Harvard-Hartford Club, and is advertising director of UAC.

Mrs. Hull attended Northfield School for Girls and is a member of the Women's Auxiliary of Manchester Memorial Hospital, the Manchester Club, and the Manchester High School P.T.O. and Buckley School P.T.O.

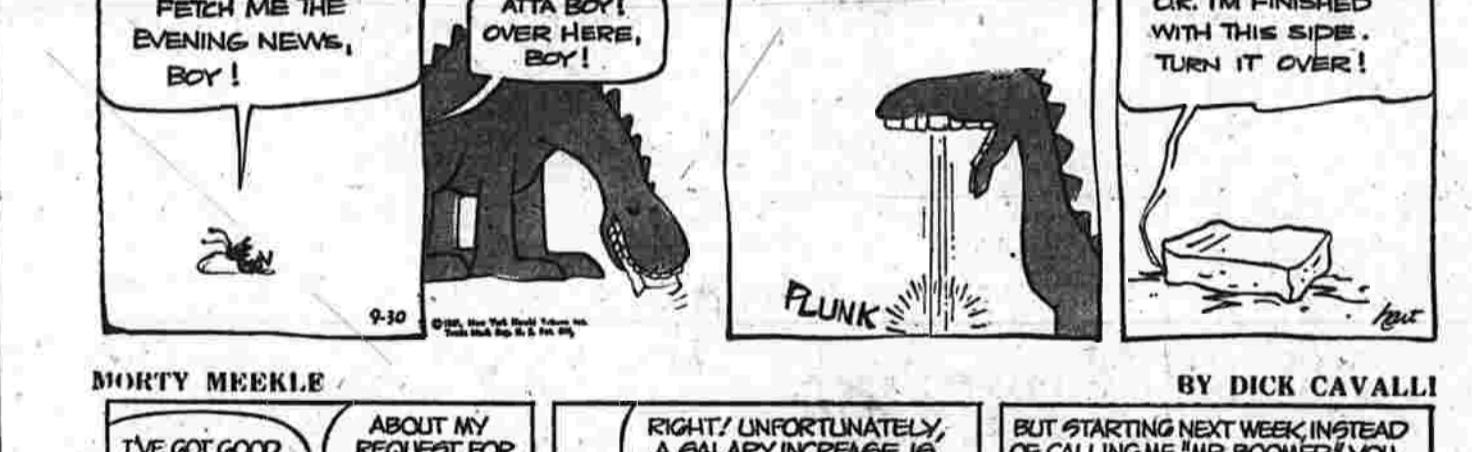

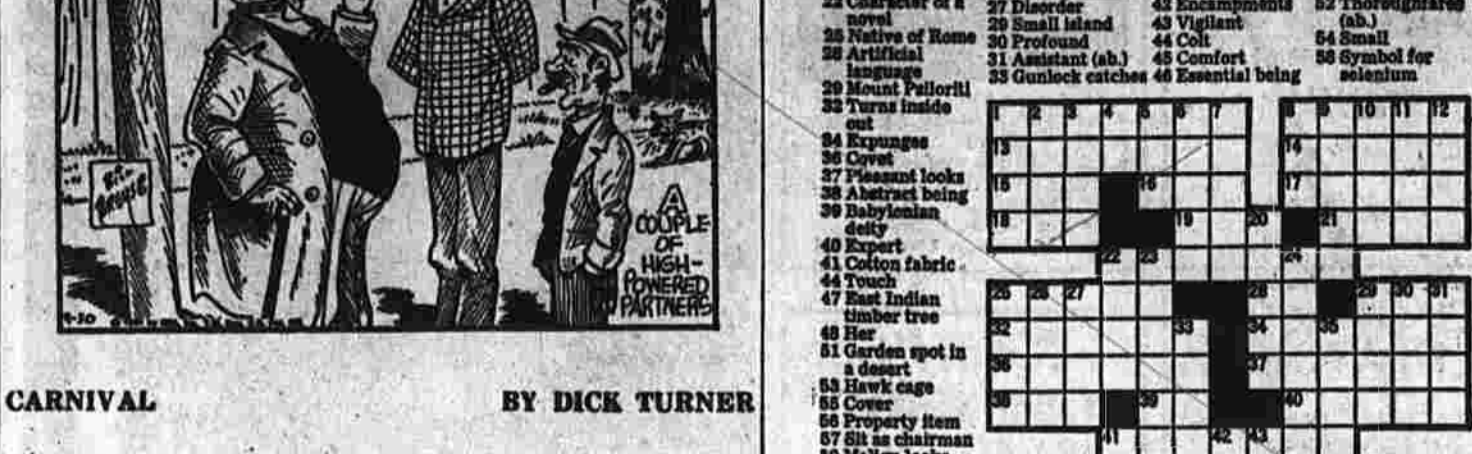

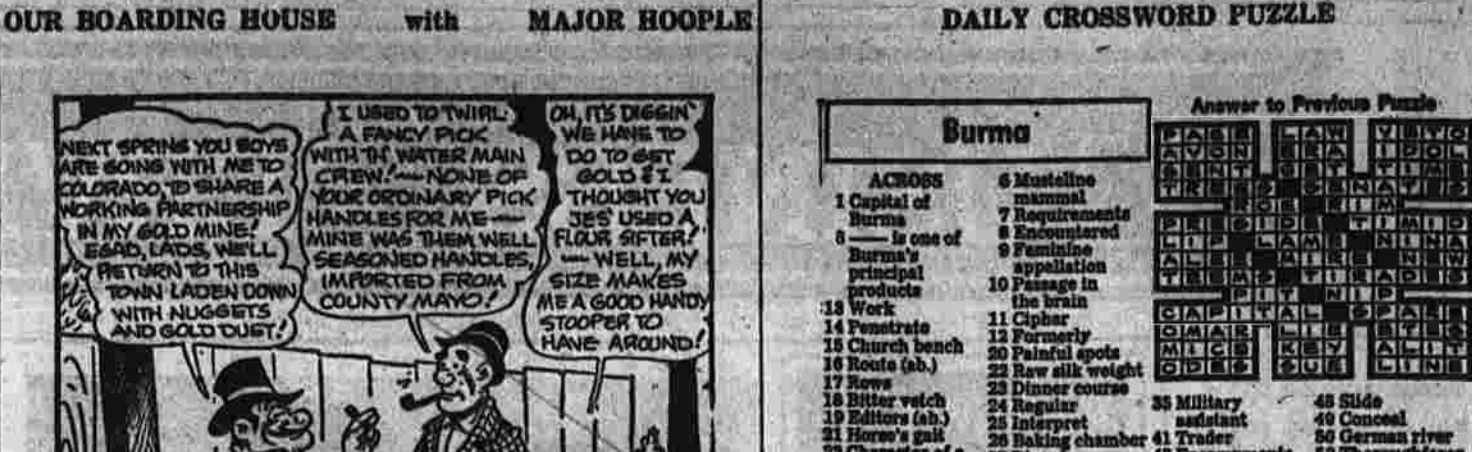

Young Jared also owns a white antique desk, a six-board pine chest, and an early cherry candlestand, all of which were purchased at auction or by Jared in the summer of 1960.

The Hulls, who have lived in Manchester since 1948, purchased the present home in Jarvis Ave. and the present home in Jarvis Ave. and the present home in Jarvis Ave.

Waterbury Natives The Hulls are both natives of Waterbury. He attended Loomis School and the Northfield School and was graduated from Dartmouth College. He served for three years in the Army Air Corps as a pilot during vacation period.

Near Misses The time was 12 a.m., Sept. 3, 1961, and Reid MacCluggage of 69 Annsaidi Rd. was at the London Airport ready to return, on Flight 208, to New York after a month's sojourn on the continent. All seemed normal, except for the fact that Reid and his traveling companion, Tony Newman, with whom he scooted around, started in Paris on Sept. 2 at 6 p.m. "We left on Paris hotel, only to take a taxi to the wrong airport (La Bourget) at the north side of the city. The time was 7:30 and our plane connection with London was to leave from Orly Airport, in south Paris, at 8 p.m. A second taxi ride ensued and fortunately the plane waited for us as we scampered through the flight gate. . . . We made it!" Reid exclaimed.

London to New York was a routine flight, except that New York was fogged in and the plane landed at Philadelphia. For several hours, the aircraft carrying Reid and fellow passengers was parked on the apron of a Philadelphia airport waiting for clearance to fly back to New York. New York International Airport finally radioed clearance and all was well—that is, except for one technicality. "We didn't have enough petrol" to get back to New York. Another two hours of waiting ensued as a search for gas went on," Reid said.

Just 24 hours after catching a taxi at La Bourget Airport in Paris, the tired travelers landed in New York. "It was nice to get back to Manchester and enjoy walking again," Reid quipped, "but just think, it only took eight hours to get us over to Europe—and settled in our London hotel."

Prospecting A couple of weeks ago General Manager Richard Martin issued a report to the board of directors on the status of the budget. It showed that a surprising $417,313 could be used from the general fund for capital improvements. Whereupon Democratic Town Committee Chairman Ted Cummings issued a statement that Republican Mayor Harold Turkington must have known about the surplus earlier and just withheld the information to make the Republican party look good. General Manager Martin opened his remarks Tuesday night to the directors with, "I want to state my claim now for the discovery."

He followed it up with a long explanation of how he had "missed the boat" in estimating both expenses and income.

More Trash One of the reporters who covers municipal meetings for a Hartford newspaper thought up his own definition of trash back when the directors were deliberating on garbage and trash collection. His limitation on what could go in the trash can: "Nothing larger than a breadbox."

Fancy Meeting You! Mrs. Alan Hartstein, 16 Colonial Rd., president of Ben Ezra Chapter of B'nai B'rith, has a good memory for faces. As she looked out on a sea of faces at a meeting of old and new members the other night at Fiano's in Bolton, she instantly recognized one of the prospective member guests.

As Mrs. Joel (Priscilla) Levy, 182 W. Middle Tpke., approached the head table, Mrs. Hartstein, in amazement, greeted her by blurt-ing out, "PS 238."

The former Priscilla Goodman and the former Adele Finkstein went to the same elementary school in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn, N. Y., and had not seen each other since school days. Mrs. Levy is a newcomer to Manchester, having moved here in July.

Mrs. Hartstein is still slightly unnerved by her experience of being transported back in time and place.

Buck Bags Big Bull Moose

It was a big one all right. The bull moose that owned these antlers measured 6 feet 8 from the hoof to the shoulder, when he was bagged by Arthur Buck of Manchester in the Paxon Lake area in Alaska. Buck, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Buck, 128 S. Main St., has returned home with his wife and son from Haines, Alaska, where he operated a general store for the past two years. He shot the animal with a 300 magnum rifle off the Richardson Highway between Anchorage and Fairbanks. Buck says he hasn't decided where to make his home now, but is thinking about New England. (Herald photo by O'Flara).

Councilmen will carry the Communion chalice and paten, and Oscar Anderson and William Custer, honorary chairmen of the new and benediction outside, the Rev. Paul Kaiser, pastor, will lock the doors of the church building on Winter St.

New Cartoon Series Will Stress Story

OK hand, talking dogs and animated cartoons would seem to have little in common.

"The idea of a talking dog is intriguing," says Jay Ward of Hollywood, "not so much for what the dog says, but the very fact that he says anything."

Ward and partner Bill Scott produce the animated color cartoon, "The Bullwinkle Show," which can be seen every Sunday evening over NBC-TV, 7-7:30 p.m. "Far too often the 'mechanics' are confused with the 'results'."

Many cartoon producers become so intrigued with the novelty of a moving drawing that they forget a prime factor—story," adds Ward.

"They open and close their show with a gag. In between they string a series of unrelated gags, like conflicting socks, sheets and dish towels on a clothesline."

Rather than dwell on this "gag" technique, Scott and Ward stress story.

"Cartoons have a basic appeal," states Ward, "but an audience will tire if presented only action without thought. Some cartoon makers go so far as to perfect animation to a life-like reality. Fine. But the story suffers in consequence. We try to use animation to tell the story, not story to sell animation."

In "The Bullwinkle Show," Jay Ward Productions have a continuing theme, each episode a logical entity.

"The most important factor in any cartoon is the writer," adds Ward, "not the animator. We prefer 'limited' motion, in contrast to a bewildering conglomeration of action."

By background, neither Ward nor Scott would seem fitted for the cartoon field. Ward, with degrees from the University of California and the Harvard Business School, at one time operated a successful real estate business in Oakland. Scott, a graduate of the University of Denver, taught high school before the lure of comedy writing took him from the classroom. He subsequently worked on "Mr. Magoo," "Gerald McBoing-Boing," "Bugs Bunny" and others.

Though prominent only in the past two years with their Rocky and His Friends, Ward was actually one of the pioneers in animated cartoons made specifically for television. Back in 1947, when viewers were watching tired vaudeville acts on their seven-inch screens, Ward was a pioneer, producing "Crusader Rabbit," which ran two years, and is now in syndication.

TV editors around the country have dubbed the partners approach as "adult-minded." The partners disagree.

Says Ward, "We aim at neither adults nor children. Our goal is to achieve (we hope) the ultimate in comedy, including subtleties which escape the youngsters but which evoke response from adults. And don't forget, that while children watch cartoons, these are the same children who watch "The Untouchables," "Twilight Zone" and Bob Hope. Kids are much smarter than we give them credit."

"The Bullwinkle Show" is a "variety" program, made up of different "acts," each show including Bullwinkle episodes.

A regular weekly episode will be "Fractured Fairy Tales," in which old favorites are re-told, Edward Everett Horton narrating. Similarly "Aesop and Son" spoofs the fables, and "Peabody's Improbable History" treats historic events with an eye to comedy not accuracy.

Along with Edward Everett Horton, the Bullwinkle Show includes the voices of Bill Conrad (radio's original Matt Dillon), Hans Conrard, Charles Ruggles, and June Foray. Scott speaks for Bullwinkle.

Ward and Scott, who have the unique distinction of being the only cartoon producers who never worked for Walt Disney, operate their 150-man company from their second-story office in an early California type Spanish bungalow court. Nearby are air-conditioned offices for writers, artists, and editors, while around the corner on Sunset Strip (No. Junior, not 77) is the head office with the main staff.

Ward personally works standing up, not at some elbow-high writing desk like a Dickensian lawyer, but using the top of a television console as his desk.

The Jay Ward staff, whom Ward modestly claims "are the best in the business," have a collective total of 74 major awards. Among them they have won nine Oscars with honors at film festivals in Nice, Cannes and Edinburgh.

POPULAR COURTS

Peter Brown of "Lawman" says the most "public" private tennis courts in Hollywood are at Dean Martin's home. Peter explains: "The courts are Dean's, but there's always a crowd using them."

Richman Former Football Player

For actor Mark Richman, chasing criminals and fighting hoodlums should be a snap when compared with his former occupation—professional football.

Richman, who stars as Nicholas Cain in "Cain's Hundred," NBC-TV's new action series (Tuesdays 10-11 p.m. NYT), captained one of Philadelphia's entries in the Eastern Professional Football League for two years before his knee was seriously injured in the last game of the 1946 season.

"It was a pretty rough way to make a living," Richman remarked. "But I loved it and would do it over again."

His prowess as a fullback was recognized when he was named all-city fullback after captaining his school's championship team.

After his professional football career was ended with the "knee injury" he entered the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy and graduated four years later with a B.S. in pharmacy.

"I'm probably the only actor licensed to practice pharmacy in two states—New York and Pennsylvania," he commented.

Degree in hand, he went to work as a pharmacist and drug store manager in Rosemont, Pa. Simultaneously, he joined a little theatre group. A year later he quit pharmacy to enter summer stock. After a few successful years in the theatre, Richman's screen career was launched when William Wyler saw him perform and invited him to New York for a screen test. The test was successful and he was cast in an important role in "Friendly Persuasion." Since then, his credits have piled higher and higher.

Richman hopes to be a director of plays and feature films, and adds: "I have already written, shot and edited a short movie."

Hollywood on TV

By ERSKINE JOHNSON, Hollywood Correspondent, Newspaper Enterprise Assoc.

Hollywood—(NEA)—An actress doesn't need the role of Sadie Thompson to become involved with rain. Not when her name is Eva Marie Saint.

We have an all-wet Miss Saint with us today. She was standing in a puddle looking like Miss Drip of 1961. Her clothes were oozing water and she was wearing a raindrop on her nose...

Eva Marie Saint

The MGM studio rainmaker had offered Eva Marie her choice—heat or cold rain. "Let's be realistic," she had said, true to her "method" training as an actress.

The rainmaker was delighted with her choice. Heating several thousand gallons of water on a sound stage takes time and money.

As she stood there, dripping like an icicle in an oven, she hastened to explain that her share of the rain that "into each life must fall" ranged from cold and wet to symbolic. Two movies, "Raintree County" and "Hatful of Rain," had left her comparatively dry.

There were both "rain" and buckets of tears in her life as Claudia in the TV series of "One Man's Family," but that was expected for a soap opera.

"I started out (in her first movie) rather damp, you know," she laughed. That was for "On the Waterfront." This was followed by a big rainstorm even Bob Hope couldn't joke about in her second film, "That Certain Feeling."

The film was followed by a vacation she and her husband took in Spain, and for which the rain in Spain changed tactics. It fell mainly on Eva Marie. "It rained everywhere we went—on hill and plain," she reported.

There was nothing symbolic, however, about the rain on Eva Marie Saint in the climactic scene of her latest film, "All Fall Down." She said, "I guess I was due for this."

When it rains at MGM, it pours. The studio rainmaker has been frustrated ever since he worked with Joan Crawford in "Rain," and even "light showers" become downpours. He was letting Eva Marie have it good as "Echo," the girl who goes off on a rainy night after captivating three men in the same family; two brothers, Warren Beatty and Brandon de Wilde, and their father, Karl Malden.

The overhead sprinkler system on the stage gushed water like a crack in Boulder Dam, and Eva Marie was wetter than a channel swimmer by the time she returned to her dressing room.

"It's kind of a shaker role," she said, 14 bath towels later. "I meet this fellow (Beatty) and his family and because of me everything changes. I shake up everybody."

Something else she'd like to shake up in her career. "I think I'm due for a change of pace," she said. "I'd like to do a musical."

She doubted if anyone remembered a stage musical, "Down in the Valley" which Tony Randall directed. The sultry voiced warbling star was Eva Marie.

"But I don't sing," she protested to Tony. "You will," he said. She did—the full score of seven numbers.

Well, maybe she'll get her chance. "West Side Story" may crank up a new musical cycle, long overdue.

Eva Marie Saint in "Singing in the Rain," perhaps?

SOUP NOTES

A guest, an aspiring vocalist on "Who Do You Trust?" sang a brief selection. "Do you sing much?" asked host Johnny Carson.

"Only to kill time," came the reply. Quipped Carson, "You've got a fine weapon!"

Q. Will the John Gunther series be back on ABC-TV this fall? Judd F.

A. No, it will not. It's being replaced by a similar show titled, "Expedition."
