Performing for Their Own Masters

Three almost looklike relatives of "Kukla, Fran and Ollie" up there on the miniature stage. The puppets, handmade by students of the arts and crafts enrichment course of the Manchester School, went through their spectacular and sometimes comical gyrations before an enthralled audience of other students and parents at commencement "exercises" yesterday.

Teacher Studies A-V Techniques

Patricia Murphy, sixth grade teacher at the Waddell School, has just completed a course in audio-visual techniques at the University of Connecticut's Educational Media Institute.

Correction In a story yesterday on a civil action in circuit court, The Herald erroneously reported that Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Agnew of 40 Tower Rd. had not obtained a mortgage on a Bay Dr. property by Sept. 15, 1963. In fact, the couple obtained the mortgage on Aug. 14, 1963. The action involved an attempt by the couple to recover a deposit under a contract with I. R. Stuch Associates, Inc. of Manchester.

Season Ends At Day Camp

Simple ceremonies, highlighted by the appearance of the nine-member blind choir from the Macgregor State Training School, marked the close today of the Macgregor day camp.

Donald Corder Union Graduate

genius program had been performed, there was an uncheduled event. Thousands had, of course, been taking part in the expanded program. But now a few hundred young Estonians, wearing their national costumes, appeared in the cobblestone streets of Tallinn, their capital, and flung themselves into a dance of their own, under the mid-night moonlight. It was something not planned, but something in their hearts.

Perhaps it was this unbridled event that led Theodore Shabad, the New York Times correspondent covering the "celebration," to do a little additional research into the condition and state of the Estonians, 20 years after the effort to cut down on Russian influence from the outside. The Estonian Communist leadership has just established a new government, covering the largest cities unless they have officially assigned to them in advance. ### The Way "Haves" Do Behave

The truth is not always polite or welcome, but there comes a time when it should be tolerated in society, and even in diplomacy.

We and it think it had come about time for somebody, somewhere, sometime, to take simply and factually the best of the proposition the "have" atomic nations have been offering the "have not" nuclear powers all along.

It was a delegate from India, who at the United Nations disarmament conference on at Geneva, said that his country, for one, could not accept the "unrealistic" and "irrelevant" proposition that a nonproliferation treaty should impose obligations only on non-nuclear powers while the nuclear powers continued to hold on to their privileged status or club membership by retaining and even increasing their deadly stockpiles.

V-J Day 1945
This Was Manchester 20 Years Ago Today

By ANTHONY J. CHEMASI

There were gay, noisy parades and car horns blaring through neighborhoods. There were fire alarm whistles, church bells and hands. There were children running and adults laughing and gathering by the thousands on Main St. And there were bonfires.

It was evening in Manchester exactly 20 years ago today. President Truman had announced at 7 p.m. that the Japanese had surrendered and World War II was over.

At the news, Manchester's businesses shut down. All police and extras were called in. Then it started.

Under a clear sky, as if by signal, townspeople left their homes and walked toward the Center and Main St. They lined both sides of the street, cheering as cars, side by side, were driven up and down Main St., horns blowing madly.

Men showed up in uniforms and with their ribbons on. Couples kissed and hugged, sometimes knowing each other, sometimes not. A throng filled Center Park. It had no purpose or plan.

At the West Side Oval, where a Twilight League game was in the first half of the fifth, a loudspeaker announcement brought the game to an end. Even before the players were off the field, the celebration began. A panel truck roared off from home plate and the driver spilled gasoline from a can along the field and on the race track. Someone else obligingly set a match to the soaked grass. A ribbon of fire wound crazily on the deserted field.

A softball game in the north end made it only to the first inning.

The spectators joined the Main St. crowds. Parades, un-planned and disorganized, were starting. They would channel that bulging energy that crowds suddenly generated. The Salvation Army Band, quickly organized, left its headquarters and headed south on Main St. Several hundred townspeople joined it. People who could never imagine themselves in a parade were walking down the middle of Main St., waving and cheering.

The band returned, formed at the Center and held an hour's concert. At the North End, amid bonfires and sign painting, a parade quickly formed. The flag was raised during the playing of the national anthem. A sailor threw a handful of Japanese bills into the air and children scattered after them.

At about 9:30 the tempo slowed on Main St. But only momentarily. The drum corps of the American Legion appeared and hundreds again followed it down Main St. Francis Miner of 193 Wells St. was commander then and led the parade, recalled the other day that it was a "badly organized parade" but it succeeded. He called the crowds, jokingly, "a mad mob" and remembers particularly the noise of that night.

Several members of the 40-and-8, a fun-making group associated with the Legion, donned grass skirts and hula-hulled down Main St.

Near 11 the crowds, tiring, began to thin. But at the moments when the cheers died down, something unexpected would revive the celebration. This time it was bagpipes played by members of the Manchester Pipe Band. Behind them, cardboard replicas of Uncle Sam and John Bull were carried. The pipers led another unannounced, wild march down south.

The routes of these parades were not always clear. They sometimes followed a line of least resistance, sometimes snaking through Center Park and visiting side streets but eventually arriving at the South End then heading back. Toward midnight the celebrants, exhausted, had made their way home, talking about the expected lifting of rationing, the war plant jobs now lost — and of those coming home. Not all those celebrating were on the streets. Some had been in churches, such as St. James' Church where a special benediction Mass was held. The incessant noises from the street drifted in.

The crowds, police said later, had been well-behaved. Guards had been placed in front of some store windows but windows at all were reported broken. A false fire alarm was sounded — at Main and Pearl Sts. — par for the night. Jack Sanson of 85 Hamlin St., then manager of the State Theater, became alarmed at the sight of a group of teen-agers rushing toward the theater. But while he was hastily closing the doors the youths playfully changed direction at the last moment. The marquee said Randolph Scott was starring in "China Sea."

Those who remained behind at their homes were not excluded from celebrating. They sat outside and waved to drivers of gaily decorated cars that toured the residential streets, horns blaring. Children in bizarre outfits paraded on the sidewalks, waving flags and blowing horns. Noise was unavoidable that night.

The following day, bright and sunny, the noise would be gone and so would rationing. Housewives would crowd supermarkets and drivers would wait patiently in long lines at gasoline stations. All businesses, Cheney Bros. included, would be closed.

But that night it was noise and spectacle for the end of a war. Open trucks carried celebrants and one truck had musicians aboard who played over a loudspeaker. A horse raiser in the north end, Stephen D. Pearl, rode a pony in one parade and a white horse drew a two-seater buggy with a half-dozen youths crowded on it.

Bonfires at the old Union School grounds glowed into the darkness and at the rear of Union Pond a haystack burned briskly. Pots and pans were tied to the rear of cars and the cars driven through neighborhoods. Firecrackers banged continually. It seemed the thing to do that night.

Roman candles and skyrockets spilled red, green and gold in the night sky. It was a calm sky, with the moon out. One might draw inferences from that.

In an editorial, The Herald wrote, "We had thought of the moon many times in the past six years, never looking up to it without the thought that it was also shining down on other peoples, into the cockpits of cargoes of death, casting its shadows from homes about to be destroyed. Now it was a moon of peace, in an evening of peace the world over."

Middle Tpk., Bill Grant, left, and Ray Streeter next to him, while Vic Dellafera, one of the owners of Manchester Auto Parts on Broad St., looks on. Mats is the president of the Mats Corp., makers of the Motor Aid-R, in Springfield, Mass. This device is installed between the carburetor and the intake manifold and a metal pipe leads from it to the crankcase. Unburned fumes are drawn from the crankcase to the device where they are mixed with the fuel and air mixture from the carburetor. Due to jet action from the unburned fumes and the blades in the device, the droplets of fuel are broken up further to burn more completely in the engine. Ekroth Laboratories, Inc., of New York tested the device to determine its quality claims made by Mats Corp. about the device. Conclusions are: With the device installed, definite increases in rear wheel horsepower, combustion efficiency and motor efficiency were noted. Most important for smog control was the reported finding that there were no objectionable exhaust fumes, or excessive carbon emissions noted, but CO2 emission was high, indicating approximately 50 to 60 per cent improved combustion and up to 80 per cent less exhaust fumes. Manchester Auto Parts has received the Hartford County franchise to sell the device. (Herald photo by Saterina.)

THE BIBLE SPEAKS by Eugene Brewer

"Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word; that they may all be one... John 17:20, 21. Ecumenicism is the popular theme in Christendom today. Division is deplored on every hand. There is a growing feeling that Christendom must close ranks or be obliterated—that denominationalism is a luxury no one can afford any longer. Jesus surely shares this desire for oneness among his followers. The sorry spectacle of alleged followers of Jesus divided into opposing and competing bodies has long hindered the spread of the gospel to the non-believers.

However, Jesus was not voicing a request for dissident groups to stultify their consciences, compromise their convictions, and amalgamate into a union of churches with a super-world-hierarchy such as is envisioned by most ecumenicists today. He prayed for a deeper unity such as characterizes himself and the Father. People do not become one simply by glossing over their differences.

The New Testament offers a program that will produce the fully Jesus desires—one body (church), one Spirit (revelation), one hope (immortality), one Lord (master), one faith (doctrine), one baptism (obedience), one God (worship), Eph. 4:4-6. Some may call this an over-embellishment. Many say the Golden Rule is impractical and will not work—they simply have not tried it. In like manner, the above platform introduced unity in the first century, and it will do so again, if and when it is tried.

New Series That Will Be Hits, Maybe

By CYNTHIA LOWEY
HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Every body in show business has his private crystal ball, and the television division, in particular, is full of prophets. But nobody — not even a nobody with a computer — has yet invented a fool-proof way to tell in advance whether a series will be a hit.

In the wonderful world of television, a hit show is one which the Nielsen ratings declare is chosen by the largest number of viewers at a given time period.

Last season preseason scuttlebutt was that ABC had a real "sleeper" in a fantasy show called "Bewitched," and it turned out to be right. But nobody was doing much talking about "Gomer Pyle — USMC" and "Gilligan's Island." Few of the experts really believed that a nighttime soap opera, even one named "Peyton Place," would really make the Nielsen grade. And everyone seemed to think that "The Rogues," with Charles Boyer and David Niven, just couldn't miss. So much for crystal balls.

If one sorts the wheat from the usual preseason press agent chaff, it would appear that ABC has a hot property in "The FBI," being made with the official blessings of the G-men.

CBS seems to be looking with special affection on a comedy series about prisoners of war called "Hogan's Heroes."

The NBC show that is causing intratrade talk is a secret-agent spoof called "Get Smart."

This observer, who shrewdly picked "The Rogues" and something called "Valentine's Day" in advance last year — both quietly disappeared at season's end — this year will try picking winners on form.

Thus "The FBI" has to be chosen, if for no other reason than that the ABC series is being produced by Quinn Martin who has made a string of hit shows ranging from "The Untouchables" to "The Fugitive." "I Spy," on NBC, figures to be a winner on the track record of its producer, Sheldon Leonard, Danny Thomas' partner in on the changing role of women, starting tomorrow on CBS' "Look Up and Live," 10:30-11 a.m.

the Lebanese comedian's long-running series, Andy Griffith's and Dick Van Dyke's shows. The odds are slightly reduced because the new series is action-adventure, not comedy, which is Leonard's forte.

Paul Henning, who created "Beverly Hillbillies" and "Pettycoat Junction" — both hits — has his third CBS series in three years, "Green Acres." He hasn't missed yet, so he has to be a contender.

The Hero Is Very Ill

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Television series, spinning complete stories around the same characters week after week, must find a valid reason for the hero's constant motion and involvement in adventures.

Doctors and lawyers and detectives are easily motivated by their patients and clients. Lawmen have a steady flow of bad guys to catch.

Soon the television screen will break out in a rash of "question men," an epidemic started by "The Fugitive," who is seeking proof of his innocence while fleeing the law. We shall see a man seeking his own identity (amnesia, of course) in one series. Another will keep riding, riding to redeem his reputation of cowardice. There are more. But by all yardsticks, the most unusual will be a hero with a medical deadline on his life, trying to crowd as much excitement as possible into his remaining days.

The series is NBC's "Run For Your Life," and the star is Ben Gazzara, one of the few highly esteemed dramatic actors from the New York stage who has a warm attitude toward the medium — possibly helped by his ownership of a percentage of the show.

Just what is the matter with the hero?

"We don't say," replied Gazzara, with a firmness suggesting he has heard the question many times. "We don't want to upset all the hypochondriacs who watch television, but I assure you there is a disease in which the patient has only a certain length of time to live but feels well until just before the end."

But will not a fatally ill hero have a depressing psychological effect on the audience?

"Quite the contrary," replied

Gazzara. "Who has not asked himself, 'What would I do if I had only two years to live?' There's great audience identification in that, and in a man who has no family to think about, is free of material responsibilities and can travel. Actually, I think the title should be 'Run Toward Life.'"

"Besides," added Gazzara slyly, "two years, at the rate of one show a week, takes a long time — like 14 years."

IN TRAINING FILMS
HOLLYWOOD — Richard X. Slatery, who enacts the captain in Warner Brothers' "Mister Roberts" series for NBC, gained his acting experience appearing in training films for the New York police department.

Dean Martin at Work--Sort of

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "And up, he said I wouldn't last two hours! That's actual working time." Dean Martin said with scorn.

The allegedly lazy singer-actor was breezing through his third film of this year and preparing to continue his string of television shows, which will total 30 in the coming season.

"Not bad for a lazy guy," he muttered.

He happened on a thought that seemed to give him pleasure. "You know," he said, "when Jerry Lewis and I broke up, he said I wouldn't last two years in show business. Now what happens? He gets dropped by Paramount!"

It should be added that his ex-partner was quickly picked up by Columbia, which signed him for a new movie, "Three on a Couch."

When Martin and Lewis split nine years ago, the wise crowd figured Dean would suffer from the breach. They didn't figure on the resourcefulness of the former Steubenville, Ohio, welterweight boxer. He has proven fast on his feet.

Why is he undertaking a full season of television when he obviously is prospering in films?

"Why not?" he countered. "All this talk about how tough television is. Baloney. You know how long it takes me to do an hour television show? Four hours. Yeah, I mean it: Four hours! That's actual working time."

"I go to the studio at one in the afternoon on Sunday and I'm home at eight in the evening. I knocked off a show like that last Sunday, right in the middle of this picture. And that morning I had myself a round of golf!"

The Martin method leaves preparation of the show up to TV creators who understand his style in music and comedy. By the time Dean arrives, the script and songs are set, he reviews them briefly, then does a run-through.

"When we started out, we did a dress rehearsal, then sat around for two hours before doing the show," he added. "I cut that out. The dress rehearsal was much better than the show, because it had that quality of spontaneity."

"We make a mistake now and then. Who wants a show that is perfect?"

Dean has no concern about the weekly exposure cutting into his movie draw.

"People who watch the TV show will see me singing and telling jokes. Since I don't tell jokes on the screen, they're seeing an entirely different Martin from what they get in theaters."

One thing is certain: Martin's way of life becomes him.

"Yeah, I don't look bad for a guy who's 44," he declared. "Tell you what does it: It's that young whisky. Some guys drink that old whisky. Not me."

'Honey West,' Another Go At Urbane Investigating

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "We'd like to think of Honey West as just a normal, average American girl who is a karate expert, drives a custom-built sports car, has an ocelot for a pet and loves gadgets, like earrings that are really little gas bombs," said producer Aaron Spelling, his tongue bracing his cheek so strongly he looked like a man with the mumps.

"Honey West," of course, is one of next season's 20 or so new television comedy series. It is an oblique commentary on the current bogged-down state of network entertainment when Spelling insists that the ABC spoof is one of next season's more daring experiments.

"No one has ever attempted it," he continued. "The odds are really against the show. The question is whether the public will accept a girl lead in a half-hour adventure show."

The mood, Spelling hopes, will be pure "Peter Gunn," the private eye series of several seasons back that combined urbanity and sophisticated, brittle dialogue with roundhouse slugging fests.

Its immediate parent, however, was "Burke's Law," which blazed a TV trail because it "kidded murder, and we've never gotten credit for it," asserted Spelling, who also produced that series.

Honey first appeared as a character in the Gene Barry series on ABC last season.

As originally observed, Honey — actress Ann Francis — was a cute private eye who protected herself against assorted evidences with a quick flip of the wrist that sprawled them on the sidewalk or with a hand-chop that knocked them cold.

George Maharis, who rode off the television range in a cloud of fury after several seasons of "Route 66," returns for the first time as an actor in one of the Bob Hope Theater shows — sharing billing with Simone Signoret. Meanwhile, he has been busy with motion picture roles and has a profitable singing career going for him.

The supply of old movies which have not been released to television is low. NBC, worried about the shortage two years ago, experimented briefly with making full-length films then dropped the expensive project. Now CBS is considering a partnership with a studio in such productions which would also be released to theaters.

Meanwhile, NBC has picked up a package of foreign films for broadcast in 1966. It includes "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" and "8 1/2."
