Renewal Refused

By all other signs, the landscape was dy for a revival and renewal of sum-. The sun was warm and golden; the nermometer was high; there was no ind at all to bring chill messages or casts from the West or from Cana-This, people said to one another, was e kind of weather, the stage of the seasons which, so far as they were concerned, could last forever, And it had opened, this spell of Indian Summer, at moment when the fall display of foliage had just revolved beyond its peak, with the weekend stripping down of the swamp maples. Even without the incomparable flames of the maples, however, there was color enough. All outdoors seemed like one warm, colorfully drapes and tapestried room.

Then, Tuesday and Wednesday, new fall of leaves began. It began quietly and silently-almost silently until the practiced ear could learn to hear a single leaf flutter-whisper on its way down, make the slightest flick of contact with the earth.

It began, the new fall of leaves, without any impulse of any kind that could be seen or felt. No twist of wind, no pelt of rain, contributed to the sudden severance of leaf from socket. One by one, two by two, sometimes in a momentary cascade as near to being the leaves drifted down into the shapes of their own trees, creating, on hill and field and lawn, the marcon, the bronze, the crimson memorials to the green clouds of summer.

They fell and fell and fell, refusing, out of their own sense of the completed fullness of life on the limb, that reof season which more careless uman instincts so often pretend they would cling to if they could

There has been a touch of this irony own in New York City's mayoralty ampaign, where one can find the sly vii in of the piece having himself an inorthate amount of fun accusing the campaign of the angelic hero of the piece t the foulest kind of campaign tactics. in the three way race, City Comptrol-Abraham Beams, the candidate of he Democratic machine, is the routine in-whose main chim to victory eems to be the pronouncement of Consman Adam Clayton Powell, the farlem leader, that it is about time for New York City to prove it can elect someone of Mr. Beame's particular reglous faith as mayor, and the nice honorable gentleman i he rade is, of course, the Republican ndependent, Congressman John Lindwhose victory in New York might aske him the great new hope of the olican party for a comeback in the

And the clever, sly Machiavelli of the uation is the third candidate, the braintruster William P. ckley, Jr., who is running as a Conative Party candidate, to propaganconservative ideas, of course, and meldentally, of course, to do everything cossible to see to it that a handsome and liberal young Republican like Lindsay doesn't get any farther up the ma-mal political ladder. As these three characters head toward the end of their campaign, the situation sems to be that Beame the Democrat will win handliy, and that Lindsay will lose by just about the percentage of the te which will be drawn away from him

In such situations, it is not the achiavellis who panic and grow desperate, but the nice guys. And, the other day, one of Lindsay's associates brought into the campaign the question of Buckley's loyalty to the finest and highest principles and leadership of his own re-thus became the camp of the canof purity who broke the most us of all rules of "glean" campaigning, leaving to the smooth and clever Machiavelli of the campaign the unbelievable privilege of announcing that he would file charges of unfair practices against Lindsay. Inevitably, those who were proud of

Lindsay had to cringe a bit, that his campaign should be trapped into going erserk enough to give such a clever fellow as Buckley the opportunity to put on the air of injured purity and high cinciple. Newspapers supporting Lindsay had to regret such tactics on the part of his campaign associate. And, in the public opinion polls, Buckley, a clever and engaging wag of a fellow who carries glibness and smoothness of tongue so far he could easily persuade the Statue of Liberty that the moon is not made of green cheese at all, but blue cheese, seems to be beginning to show new life and popularity. So, the cards of the moment say, the machine candidate will win the election, the sly candidate will become the hero, and the Galahad will come out of the thing with a big blemiah on his shield. It is usually more immediately successful, in politics, to be clever than it is to be well-intentioned.

Poor Relative Aesthetics

By the inexorable laws of economics everybody either is or has a poor relative. Everybody, therefore, has some familiarity with the habits of the poor He always thinks that the things he imself can never quite afford are foolish, materialistic luxuries. The latest demonstration of this poor relative talent is being provided by the reactions of Germans of East Germany when, these days, they come visiting ing the people of West Germany so busy thinking about material things. All they talk and think about, it seems, is countries. Instead of nice, old-fashioned friendly evenings, they all watch TV. Being so busy with such materialistic things, and with such artificial ways of passing their time, the West Germans warmth and friendship and simple pleasure in one snother's company which used to be so much a part of good Ger-nan living.

So goes the distilusionment of the poor relatives from East Germany. One goes not question their sincerity, A preference for the idealistic and intangible values of life comes easily, and sincerely, to those who haven't yet had all the materialistic pleasures and dis-

Third, my children, perplexed at the outset, now squirm under a curtain of total bewilderment. "Jane's daddy always drives his car to work-why don't you?" says one. Granted, it's difficult these days to have a father who is difratherings. "Why, my Henry never walks, and he certainly should," says one spouse, while Henry's fists tighten. Henry generally is five feet five and weights 250, and his pedestrian activity is confined to about 10 feet between his side door and his car. Fifth, the dogs in neighborhoods all slong my route think I'm a mailman who couldn't sleep. No less intrigued, I am spre, are the late-risers awakened by the barking. In fact, they occasionally less from their windows and cheer-tilly less me water.

ily keep me pasted on the time of day, like "Doncha know it's only 7:20, for the luvva Rike?"

Sixth, the shipmunks and grouse, who normally enjoy secluded lives in fields I now cut across, scatter frantically, visibly insulted that a human being should invade their castures.

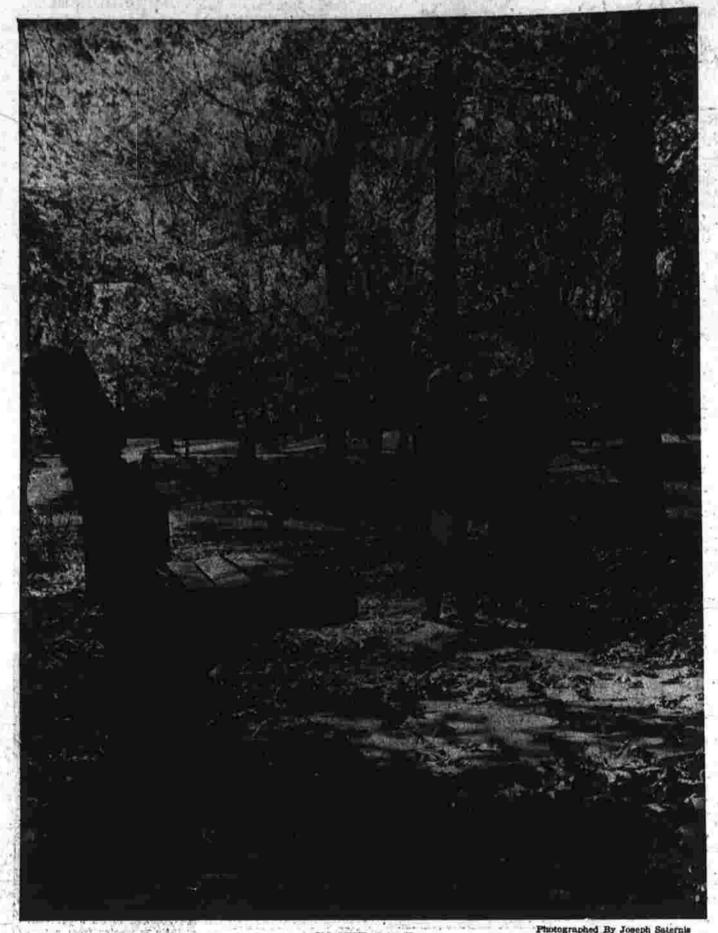

Seventh, the motorists who glide by wonder what sort of creature deliber-ately would walk on a hot morning. Eighth, then sign bike riders use me for their own version of "chicken" as they try to see how close they can pass without actually knocking me off my feet. The record, I think, is 4½ inches, achieved by an adolescent lad whose attention was diverted by a female schoolmate across the street.

Ninth, oscillating sprinklers invariably sig as I mag, making me recall Seneca's pungent savice, "Never shine your shoes before walking to work."

Tenth, patroimen in erusers slow Apyn just a trifle in hopes I might match the description of a burglary suspect.

Over-all, it has been a stimulating elt-tightening experience, even if I am regarded as a man who hears a differ ent drummer, a man out of step with society.—WARREN J. BRIER IN THE NATIONAL OBSERVER

When it came to the Convention floor, in a package, wearing a favorable report, its advantageous situation was that it took a two thirds vote to knock it out. That was not forthcoming. The vote on the effort to knock out the new eminent domain provision the Rules Committee had written into its version of the new Bill of Rights lost, with 28 for the old language, and 49 for the new. And thus, by the use of the right tactics, a section got into the proposed new Constitution which did not have, in its own right, the required twothirds, or 56 votes, in its favor. So, although it did not gain a two-thirds vote of the convention by itself, but only after it had been committee - rollered into a package, the new eminent domain provision is now
