Of Course There's No Problem with Leaves

You say you have a problem with leaves? The solution is easy. All you need is a lightweight tractor, a master mechanic who can attach a leaf-screen to it, an operator who can push the leaves into neat piles, and a Vac-All which can gobble-up the whole mess. That's exactly the operation which the town is following in cleaning street gutters. The

There was, this time, a slight variation in the usual routine, in which bank employes, as instructed, cooperate quietly with the holdup men, the holdup men, in return, behave politely, the state police pursue fiercely, and now and then with good results, and the in-

Self-Destructive Memoirs Memoirs seem to be becoming increasingly destructive of the men who write them, and in our time only Winston Churchill and Charles de Gaulle seem to save enhanced their own stature and reputation by the way they have writen about themselves and their own imes. And quite possibly, in their two cases, they owe a great deal to their possession of literary styles which might abellish any kind of story.

On the American scene, however, the result has been less positive and pleas-

George F. Dougherty In the activity for which nearly 30 years of graduates of Manchester High School will remember him best, George F. Dougherty specialized in leading young minds into the skills and tactics of debate. And his own skills, and quietly persuasive tactics for teaching them, were in themselves unusual.

But to many of those who watched him in his professional career and in his Manchester citizenship, George Dougherty taught a lesson more valuable than that of debating skill. He taught, in precept, and in his own behavior, the merit of having convictions, and, once having them, of defending them with feeling and with courage. He often suffered, and gave the appearance of, a physical frailty. But the mind and the spirit were quietly big and strong. He was never afraid to accept the dignity and responsibility of being a free individual.

Those who were privileged to associate with him, in the school, and in the community, feel the loss of both parts of the man-his skill with the outline and the tongue-but, much more important-
