Saturday, November 6

These are the things he said he saw: "Our independence regained without owning our friendships. Our practicooperation with the people of our colonies, which had become anachronistic and often bloody. r term of almost absolute personal

This de Gaulle litany of present state and future hope for France and for Europe makes much more sense than does the silly running attack on de Gaulle from outside commentators and policy makers who continue to pretend that NATO is a live alliance, that "Europe" consists of six countries, that the division of the real Europe can last forever, and that Germany is a better ally for the United States than France.

When we give de Gaulle credit for hings he has done, and concepts for Europe which make more sense than those of any other prominent leader of our time, we are still not, unfortunately, dealing with the most serious question raised by his new candidacy. This is a question raised by the way he put that candidacy to his own peo-

This was his language: "Today I believe I must hold myself eady to carry on my task, judging fully the extent of the effort but convinced that it is the best course at this time to serve France.

"Thus our country offers itself the best means of confirming, by its votes, the stable and efficient regime that we have instituted together. If the frank and massive endorsement of the citizens commits me to remain at my post, the future of the new republic will be assured definitively. "If not, no one can doubt that she will soon crumble and that Francethis time without any hope of recourse -will be reduced to confusion more disastrous than she has ever known." If he confesses himself to be that in dispensable, after his first seven years of office, how can he himself believe that election for seven more years will somehow bring an end to that indispensability? If he doesn't dare ask France to stand on its own feet now, how can he dare remain mortal, subject to mortal disappearance from the scene? If, in his view, the existence and leadership of one single man is that desperately important to his country, what steps has he taken to cushion the possible moment of that man's disappearance? What other leadership does he have in training? Precisely what does he propose doing, during a new seven year term, which would build up France's political muscle to the point where it might be able to stand on its own feet and govern itself by the democracy President de Gaulle has been protecting by the dangerous expedient of putting it on the shelf? These are the questions about President de Gaulle and his candidacy which, even while one admits his greatness, still make one shudder. What an admirable adjustment of the present situation it would make if he, de Gaulle, were a little less strong and masterful, and his

Safety Patrol Gets Bad-Weather Coats

"Are you sure this really is my size?" Mike Falco seems to ask as Claudia Moore fixes the top button on his new safety patrol bad-weather coat. Audrey Noyes and Larry Perry, two other youthful guardians in the newly created safety patrol squad at the Nathan Hale School, watch the ceremony secure in rather more snugfitting uniforms. The school received from its PTA a gift of 17 bright yellow raincoats for use by the patrol in its daily sentinel of busy street corners and crossings in the vicinity of the school. The gift seems to be especially well timed in view of the imminent cool and windy weather. Like "The National Driver's Test", broadcast twice last year, Tuesday's program will test viewers with a variety of questions and illustrations.

Introducing the questions will be dramatizations, film animations, and actual newsfilm. Some of the sequences concerning people involved in robbery, search, arrest, jail, prison and other situations were filmed us-

On the broadcast, Mike Wallace will give viewers the test sample results as well as results of tests given on the air to three specially selected groups: Members of Congress and their wives in Washington; Democratic and Republican party workers in Philadelphia; and high school students in St. Louis, Harry Reasoner will ask the questions.

"The viewers will not only be giving their instant reactions to specific questions," Westin "but we hope they will find themselves thinking about their lives while they check their knowledge about our American heritage, their rights

The questions were prepared by CBS News in cooperation Test" Tuesday night at 10 on with the Educational Testing Service of Princeton, N.J.; who created and supervised achivesaid CBS News Executive Di- ments tests and college and graduate school entrance examinations.

> After the questions were written, they were approved by a board of advisors consisting of Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey, Senate Minority Leader Everett M. 'Dismembering' Movies on TV

Does a movie maker have the right to prevent his work from being cut and interspersed with commercials on television? George Stevens thinks so.

This week he took on NBC, Paramount, sponsors, ad agencies, et al, to prevent his classic "A Place in the Sun" from being "disjointed and dismembered" on television. The movie scheduled for "Saturday Night at the Movies" this season, but Stevens hopes to prevent it.

Stevens called a news conference to announce his suit. He told of watching "Stalag 17" on NBC last Saturday and he enumerated in detail the 42 commercials during the show. "Each was a story in itself," said the director.

" 'A Place in the Sun' was designed like a symphony," he declared, adding that it couldn't possibly be appreciated with 42 interruptions.

What are his chances? Otto Preminger sued to prevent showing of "Anatomy of a Murder" on three ABC stations, A New York Supreme Court jus- bravery.
