Discover Hidden Meaning By The Reading Laboratory, Inc. Written for NEA Special Services

> The hidden meaning of a word Is found in all you've read and heard.

-30 Days to Better Spelling-

We might start out this article by some such profound observation as that there are no horizons to the worlds which books open up to us and that our vision will stretch out in direct proportion to the size and accuracy of our vocabulary or command of words in the English language. To most readers this is as true as it is obvious, so we shall skip the pep talk and get right to the business of enlarging our vocabulo Easy Exit From Long Error By its verbal conduct in recent years, munist China has made the annual unk of the United States Ambassador to the United Nations a little easier than it used to be. The big power outside the United Nations pale has, of late, been denouncing the club in which It does not have membership more bitterly than ever. It has been snarling out preposterous conditions for its own possible acceptance of membership in the event the club should offer to open Its doors. Consequently, Ambassador Goldberg yesterday could fill up the main portion of his own speech opposing the entry of Communist China with stinging quotations from the spokesmen of Communist China which, if taken with complete seriousness, could make people ask why anybody was even bothering to try to bring the question of Communist China's membership to a vote. The answer is that not everybody takes Communist China's words as seriously as Ambassador Goldberg's oratory is privileged to do. To some of the other members of the United Nations, Communist China's verbal savagery about the United Nations is the inevitable conduct of the street corner tough who hasn't yet been invited to run with the gang. If a nation of Communist China's size and power and really the world's least exclusive club, its own sense of prestige demands that it abuse the club. So the verbal battle rages, and yet everybody participating in it, including the authors of Peiping's abuse of the UN and Ambassador Goldberg who quotes that abuse against the cause of Communist China, knows that eventually the street corner toughle is going to sit in the United Nations and drop some of his cheap bravado when he visualize what the eventual outcome has to be does not, however, make it any easier to take even small steps in that Even those who argue, with great persuasion, that the United States should never have begun blocking Communist China in the first place, far back before the Korean War, do not find it easy to specify just what procedure or logic the United States could begin following today in order to cure that original mistake, which has, in the interim, been hardened and compounded by additional mistakes of all kinds. This is one more situation, in fact, where the United States has got itself into a position in which it possesses little choice and from which it can find no easy exit. We may be wrong, but where is the right step for us to take in the other direction? What kind of statement could the President and the State Department give to Ambassador Goldberg in order to begin a turn in the United States position? After a brief search for such a position, any of us can begin to understand why the Goldberg speech, yesterday, solved its problem by the sterile process of reading the words of Communist China back to Communist China. If this makes a debate which is neither serious nor real, there is nothing better which seems possible for the United States at the moment. And the United Nations itself had better, by its votes. let the long error of the deadlock and the exclusion last another year, until both sides can at least find some bet-

Defining The "Mistake"

One news account from Detroit, chronicling the death of a 53-year-old man dropped by a shotgun blast as he walked near his home, reported that the dead man apparently was the innocent victim of a gang riding around in a car. The gang, according to police theory, had been seeking revenge on a group of teenagers who had thrown a bottle at their car. So the man died "by mistake," as it were.

And this possibility, that it had been mistake, was the argument the police and the clergymen of Detroit used to keep the incident from spreading out nto more murders. The youths in the car with the shot gun were white. The teenagers who had brown a bottle at the white youths in the car had been Negro. And the "innocent victim" shot down by the youths in the car as he walked near his home was a Negro.

The nature of the "mistake" requires closer and more specific definition. It was, apparently, that the white youths in the car selected the wrong Negro. Their crime, apparently, would have been something less, something different, if they had killed one of the Negro teenagers who had thrown the bot-

Now nobody really meant this, or anything like this, or meant to give any such impression. It is just that authorities, and clergymen, and people who want to keep some occasional degree of peace in this savage, bestial, jungle world of ours have to grasp at any kind of argument in their effort to keep things from getting worse. So we had, out in Detroit Negro clergymen telling their people not to get excited, because the shooting might have been a mistake. It was better, we suppose, to endorse such a white lie than to press the honest issue toward a race riot in which still more tragic and mistaken violence would have been certain.

Yet, in racial situations as in international situations, the basic mistake does not concern the identity of the eventual targets, however tragically in error that may seem to be. The basic mistake is that of picking up and wielding the weapon of violence in the first place. If no one had picked up the bottle, if no one had picked up the shotgun-these were the moments the real mistakes were made.

The November Grey

Dictionaries old enough and small enough to care about such things-the elephantine newest volumes are tobusy sanctifying new language to tell you what the old language was-give the information the word grey, spelled with the e, is the common British form of the word gray, spelled with an a. And that, when we get down to motives, could be the subtle, undercover reason why, in writing about Sunday's and Monday's weather, we have an overpowering instinct to write of grey days in a grey November.

It is weather of this kindly and pervasive overcast which we imagine lying over the moors of the Hardy country and over the turrets of London. It is a weather which demands the wearing of tweeds, and dictates the image of the steaming teapot at the end of the walk, and guarantees encounters with Sherlock Holmes or Mary Poppins behind every aspidistra. It is the weather which enables our cousins the British to overcome their natural reserve and and become the friendliest people in the world, until the sun frightens them back into their armor once again. We, in this country, have an instinct to respond to such a day in much the same way. Every color has been muted but we think the countryside beautiful. The air is humid and motionless, but this, in November, is an attractive mildness. Homes loom more separately in the mist, but each symbolizes a more special safety and warmth.

When, occasionally, the greyness of the day intensifies enough to drift into the face in the form of raindrops, there is no instinctive reaction from the nerves of the skin, no mental impulse proclaiming the need for shelter. The rain is grey, the hillside is grey, the home is grey, the roads, the tree trunks, the skies are grey, all the birds, even the crows by the time the eye filters through to them, are grey, all cats are grey, and grey thoughts go in the grey light from grey heads to grey type, and what is next to being no color at all filters its unique and memorable spell into every nook and cranny of our living. And that, we know when it comes to us in two such days, is an illogical perfection of weather and mood which could only happen in November, or England.

Couldn't Wait A Day Commissioner Mulcahy's state police have come in for criticism due to the rather unfriendly concept of setting up radar traps the minute the new section of I-91 was opened to the public. Ten minutes after the road was de clared officially in operation, the first speeder was arrested, allegedly travel ing at 80 miles an hour, and within the first 24 hours 80 speeders were

The following day the troopers were still manning radar traps and several more were arrested in the afternoon. It is true, of course, that a long, brand new stretch of highway sometimes encourages speeding. This seems to be the case in respect to I-91. However, it would seem that there is a place for a certain amount of reticence on the first day the road opens. If the state police were really concerned about some one injuring himself by speeding, the applicable technique would have been to post two or three troopers in conspicuous places to slow down the traffic by their presence, rather than tying up six cars on the 11 miles stretch on ra-

But we are afraid that this was a grand stand play, nowhere near as effective as stationing police cars in certain areas. The series of three police cars really does slow traffic down, rather than merely at the point beyond the radar trap. What Connecticut es sentially needs is policing of the high traffic accident roads, rather than the is beginning to move slowly in this direction, but his recognition of the prolilem has been tardy. — MIDDLETOWN

The reason that religion often seems to be such a dull bore is because so many "religious" people have never progressed beyond the "Thou shalt not" stage. This is not religion but morality. And morality is only a small part of religion. No man was ever saved from anything by what he did not do. We are saved only by what we do do. for your home MANCHESTER BETTER HOME HEAT COUNCIL if you were to be handed $1.00 a minute...24 hours a day...for 11 years... you still wouldn't have 6 million dollars.

(in fact, it would take 5 months longer!)

Any way you think of it, that's a large amount of money.

$6,000,000 is Hartford National's new legal loan limitthe amount we can lend, unsecured, to any one borrower.

A bank's legal loan limit is set at 10% of capital and surplus, which in Hartford National's case is now, obviously, $60,000,000. Ours is the highest such loan limit of any bank in Connecticut.

Frankly, we don't expect too many requests for $6,000,000 loans. Most people have quite enough to do these days just keeping up with the mortgage payments and the instalments on the car. But our loan limit is important as one more dramatic measure of our overall capacity to contribute to Connecticut's growth—by providing the money needed to build and expand factories, start new businesses, build new schools, stores, highways, hospitals and homes. This, in turn, means more and better jobs, greater income, and a higher standard of living for Connecticut's people

Although $6,000,000 is the maximum amount we can lead to any one borrower, Hartford National has more than $350,000,000 in more than 80,000 loans now at work for business, industry, individuals and families throughout Connecticut. That's our job, and whether it's $6,000,000 or $600, Hartford National is always ready to put money to work for you.

Modern dryers are electric! According to an old wives' tale "There's nothing like sun and the sweet outdoors for drying clothes." But . . . it is an old wives' tale!

... even on the darkest, most formidable days. And it's never cold in electric dryers . . . even when the snow is falling fast. Dust, dirt and ashes? Not in electric dryers.

Clothes that are dried in electric dryers dry gently. They never end up wind-whipped, faded, or frozen. They always come out fluffy and smelling sweet . . . either damp-dry ready for ironing or bone-dry ready to fold, whichever you wish.
