A Continent His Hostage

It is a new kind of rebellion, that of Rhodesia, with a special population of $20,000 living in the midst of 4,000,000 people declaring the independence of a territory in order to maintain its own racial monopoly of the country's des-

It is proclaimed, this rebellion, in language whose whereases and rhythms are patterned on those of the American claration of Independence. That too, perhaps, may have, in its time, been the proclamation of a minority. But if the dherents of the American Revolution were ever a minority, they were at least a minority dedicated to the achievement and spread of principles of freedom and equality, not to the proposition of limiting the application of such

The heart and purpose of this rebellion is the establishment of one solution of the racial problems of our time. It would run parallel to the solution being relentlessly established next door, in South Africa, the solution of complete and rigorous segregation.

This is, in the minds of the white people who took Rhodesia and, with heir skills and talents, made for themselves a paradise, their only way to stand off the kind of change which would take their paradise away from generous and kindly overlords if they are allowed to remain overlords, and if the 4,000,000 people who are part of the raw material of their paradise do not get silly notions about wanting to ess authority of their own. That's the picture—the tragic pice of the extreme practice of one exme solution of the world's racial lem being offered to the world in a manner which demands that the world

The world reacts, as in the denunciation by Britain, by the United States, and by members of the United Nations and by prompt votes in the United Nations, with dismay and with horror.

But the almost complete unanimity of outside disapproval does not mean that there is any way the world can successfully and safely dispute the will of this desperate minority. It knows full well the desperation of what it is doing, and has preferred that desperation to any alternative it can imagine. And there is a cool madness in its desperation. It proclaims its own move, and sits tight. Then, if someone else moves with force, it is that someone else who is unleashing the terrible war of the races which could come next. In a sense, Prime Minister Ian D. Smith holds all Africa as his hostage.

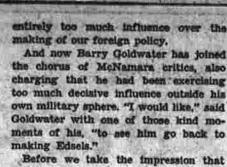

The effort apparently is going to be to starve him out economically and ostracize him diplomatically, and thus bring him to the point where he changes position and policy and lets the hostage continent loose again. We will believe in the efficacy of such economic and political pressures against such dedicated desperation, which is shrewd enough to guess that no one will dare the alternatives, when we see these pressures producing peaceful results. If there is to be an absence of bloodshed and race war, we think It will be because the "rebellion" is allowed to continue in existence.

McNamara's Friends If there has ever been anything needed to begin the process of building up some public sympathy for Defense Secretary Robert McNamara, the computerlike executive, it was the completion of the circle of critics aiming at him by the addition to that circle; the other day, of Barry Goldwater. For well over a year, Mr. McNamara has been the continuing target of

Senator Wayne Morse, the Oregon maverick, who coined the phrase "McNamara's War" to cover our involvement can catch should grow accordingly, and Two weeks ago, Senator William Fulbright, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and a middle road critic of our conduct in Vietnam, joined the ranks of McNamara critics, praising him as an able man, but questioning whether he was not appropriating to samelf and being allowed to exercise

Before we take the impression that Fulbright and Goldwater think exactly alike about McNamara too seriously, we should realize that Mr. Goldwater, even now as during his campaign, still needs ome interpretation now and then. And Mr. Goldwater's main quarrel with Mc-Namara is not really that Mr. McNamara has been playing too large a part in the making of foreign policy which should more properly be made by the State Department, The Goldwater quarrel is with the fact that the Secretary of Defense has been taking the business of preparedness and design and direction of war away from the generals and the admirals. But, whatever, the niceties of each infividual enmity, there is the circle complete. At this point, it, seems appropriate to observe that anybody who has Morse, Fulbright and Goldwater all sniping at him must be doing something right.

The Layman's Version

If you were sitting at your television, early last Tuesday evening, you probably saw the "quarrel" of the currents which set off the "massive" blackout. You may remember that there was first a brief disturbance of the picture transmission, which left the program of the hour coming to you with sound

That was the turbulence coming over the great wires from Buffalo to Connecticut—the turbulence which, if it ever happens again, and there has been time to install them, will probably be met and halted by automatic circuit breakers almost everywhere. You may remember that, next, the picture came back on again.

That was a momentary impulse of full power heading through the lines in the opposite direction-back toward But the amount of power being generated in the East was hardly a drop in the bucket compared to the power vacuum left as the first turbulence re-The next thing that happened was that everything was gone, picture, sound, and supper. If that was the way it happened, one can forecast two precautions likely to be made compulsory for the future, One would be the installation of automatic circuit breakers, which kept Tuesday's trouble from spreading down into Ohio, for instance. The other will probably have to be some requirement that individual utilities or groups of utilities will have to maintain a higher level of generating for themselves even while they are sharing in the cheaper power product available on the great lines. Tuesday night all these sectional utilities began serving their own territories again, but it took them hours to get their own generators going enough to make that service possible. One doubts that they will choose, or be allowed, to be caught again without more steam up. That is today's layman's ignorance, but perhaps the way the story will still be told, accurately enough, to future generations, after all the more learned analysis and investigation has been

Fresh Fish

For years people have been moaning about the New England fishing industry. They have had reason to moan, too. Since the early fifties it has been steady declining. In 1950, according to New England Business Review, New England's ports handled more than a billion pounds of fish and scallops, about one fifth of the nation's total volume. By 1962 volume had fallen to 872 million pounds, about 16 per cent of the national

The most discouraging thing about the decline of the industry has been that it has occurred in the face of a growing demand for fish and fish products. Never before have so many Americans eaten so much fish. But still our eatch hasgone down and the number of boats fishing and men employed has dwindled. The three reasons most often cited for this situation are foreign competition, inefficient American methods and the cost of building fishing boats in the United States. The reasons are all tied up with one another: the existing boats are inefficient because they are old and their inefficiency helps the foreign competitors. An 18th century law prohibits the purchase of fishing vessels built outside the United States which can be built for 40 to 50 per cent less in Japan or Norway. There are some rays of hope on the horizon, however. The 1964 Fishing Fleet Improvement Act makes available subsidies ranging up to 50 per cent of fishing vessel construction costs, thus making it possible for American owners to acquire boats at costs (to them) which are competitive with what foreign owners pay. And a new type of trawler, which operates its nets and gear over the stern instead of over the side is more efficient, safer, and requires a smaller crew. The New England Business Review estimates that the fleet should grow by as much as 10 vessels a year between now and 1970, the Ameri-

the consumer will benefit through low-Let us hope that this is just the beginning of not just a revitalization but of a revolution in the New England fishing industry. Men's future, as oceanographers and other scientists have pointed out, lies as much in the sea an among the stars. - BOSTON HERALD

The day doesn't go by that we do not get a request to "Drive By" a certain property. Driving by does not show the interior of a home. It does not give a good view of the all important rear yard. Quality of construction cannot be gauged. Many other facets are missed. This is proven by the fact that often when we convince a homeseeker to go through a residence previously and off handedly rejected by a cursory drive past, a sale results. Neverthless, to paraphrase the old maxim about the boss not always being right but always being the boss, we realize that the public is our boss. So-o-o-o-o, here's a partial list of our properties for sale, complete with addresses. Do call us to inspect leisurely. Happy driving.
