More Closings WASHINGTON (AP)

Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara today ordered 149 more bases closed, consolidated or substantially reduced. McNamara told a news conference the actions, calculated to save $410 million a year, "will be completed without decreasing military effectiveness or limiting our current and future activities in Southeast Asia." Coupled with 703 previous hase closing and cutdowns ordered since March 1961, the new moves will bring total sav-ings to $1.5 billion a year, McNamara said. The affected bases are located in 39 states, the District of Columbia and 10 foreign countries.

Off The Pedestal

Of all the traditions of France, there has been one the grand nostalgia of Charles de Gaulle has always been willing to bury and forget.

The French tradition which de Gaulle has loved least has been the unquenchable, the irresistible instinct of the French people to be almost libertine in following their own individualistic fancies in the realm of politics. Perhaps the most notable characteristic of French democracy is its persistent ability to paralyze itself by dividing its support among so many gradations of political principle that no clear point of view or principle ever really gets much of a chance to govern To this rule, President de Gaulle has been providing the exception ever since he came to power as an emergency recourse, and settled, in his almost dictatorial grandeur, the tragic problem emocratic France had proved unable solve for itself—the problem of Al-The gratitude of thinking Frenchmen for de Gaulle's courage and vision with regard to Algeria has probably not iminished in the slightest. But the ery relaxation of crisis which de Gaulle's success in Algeria produced has provided room for a reflowering of all those instincts for political diversity which are typical of the French people. They are once more, tired of the inispensable man. They no longer consider all his programs and ideas indispensable, either. But even if they considered de Gaulle right in everything, they might still be capable of choosing to be their free selves with a chance

So, on this election day in France, President de Gaulle, who can be given credit for saving his country at least twice, received only 44 per cent, or a minority, of the vote cast, not because the other 56 per cent of the voters were all really determined to vote him out of power, but because many of them were willing to vote him down off the pedestal of indispensability. This vote result, under French elec-of being wrong than to be the comfortable captives of one man's wisdom and tion law, forces de Gaulle into the humiliation of having to face a run-off contest to retain the Presidency, when he must certainly have seemed to himself the national hero entitled to office for life if he sought it, as, indeed, he did. The defeat involved is partly for the man, but primarily for the style. If he chooses to continue to be President, which most analysts still consider easlly possible for him in the run-off, he must also choose to be something less of an authoritarian. He must also choose to realize that not even he can repeal the French Revolution.

As for the specific de Gaulle policies which have so much concerned other countries, it would be something of a mistake to assume that the rebuke to de Gaulle also constitutes a clear rebuke to each and every one of them. He was deserted, in this voting, by two large groups of voters. One of these groups thought he ought to be more friendly to the routine coalition policies of the Western nations. But the other group which moved away from de Gaulle and contributed to the showing' of the left wing candidate who ran second was the Communist vote, which probably agrees more with de Gaulle's view of Europe than with Washington's. It is still possible, in other words, that some of de Gaulle's policies are still stronger than de Gaulle himself and still command the composite majority he himself missed in the Sunday

No Recession Named For Lyndon To the possibility that President Johnson and his advisers would take some courageous frontal look at the growing dangers of inflation, and set themselves into some kind of drastic mood for some dousing down of the fires under our economic balloon, there has been the quick response of an emergency speech the President delivered, by telephone, to a session of the Business Council in Washington. The tone of the speech represented a clear choice on the part of the President and his economic advisers. They may be wishing, in their own secret litde closets where they sit with the sta-. distics, that things were not quite as flighty as they seem. But when it come to showing their face and mood to the public, they have decided that the most important thing they can do is to make sure to keep the boom alive, and to avoid any danger that some artificial official check to it might shock the whole American spending structure enough to produce any really conspicuous period of retrenchment.

One can guess what precedent they had in mind. President Eisenhower once, in a similar period, talked frankly to the American people, and told them prices were getting too high, and advised them to sit on their money a little bit now and then. But what happened when Presiden

Eisenhower indulged himself in this bit of unorthodox candor was that this country did, perhaps quite sensibly, bu also quite unpleasantly, begin to have itself a kind of immediate recession. For want of anything more specific to blame it on, this recession became known as Eisenhower's, and some people traced it directly to his old-fashioned shopping remark, and to nothing

President Johnson and his advisors wanted no part of any such complicity in any little recession. They may find it difficult to control inflation, but they consider that a task much more pleasant than the task of trying to control a recession might be.

The result of their deliberations showed in the tone of the President's remarks to the business group. There was no word of admitted worry about the dangers of inflation. Instead, there was a serene confidence about the capacity of our economy to keep on growing soundly, forever, and ever.

undercover alarm indicated by the number of times and the number of ways the President contrived to say this. And he virtually tipped his hand and motivation when he included, in his speech, several references to the vital importance of confidence, "the confidence," the President said, "that our prosperity requires."

There was, of course, some kind o

There was an Eisenhower recession There was a Kennedy recession. But there absolutely must not be a Lyndon recession.

The possibility can be stated, however, that the Eisenhower and Kennedy recessions may have been the safety valves, the touches of readjustment, which keep the balloon in controlled flight, and away from the kind of economic trouble which is spelled not recession but depression.

To give the present President his due, we assume that, as soon as he has us all believing that there is no limit to the amount of ballooning prosperity we can have, he and his men will be still trying to find some quiet, unspectacular ways to let a little inflationary gas out

Safe Yes, But Alive?

We do not question in the slightest the validity of the warning issued by one Dr. James L. Malfetti, director of a safety education project down at Columbia University, to the effect that drivers who smoke while driving are involved in four times as many accidents as nonsmokers.

It is easy to provide the arguments for such a view. Smoke gets in the eyes. Reaching for the lighter, or for the ash tray, or trying to strike a match, or snuff out some live coal which has dropped into the upholstery, can provide the moments in which eye and concentration leave road and wheel and terrible things happen.

On top of all this good argument, it can also be assumed that people who smoke do so because they are nervous people, who are therefore natural bad

We may come, then, to a second law about driving. One must not drink and drive. One must not smoke and drive. These are two of the pleasurable vices this rich and fertile earth somehow took pains to offer its human inhabl-

One can, one supposes, learn to do without them. That raises the question of what pleasure then might be left in life. And the immediate answer, on the statistical record, would be that that, too, would have to go. For there is no doubt that drivers who look at girls standing on street corners have eight times as many accidents as drivers who drink or smoke.

and drive, don't ogle and drive. That will keep you safe. And being safe must be some kind of a substitute for being alive.

Bands Gone Soft

Hemlines and car models aren't the only things that change with the years. Add to the list marching bands and bugle corps.

Don't drink and drive, don't smoke

When a military band whipped down the street in olden times, it trilled "The Stars and Stripes Forever" or "Under The Double Eagle," or something equally as stirring and strident. But the rigamarole offered by halftime bands at football games, to say nothing of the five-hour parade staged by the American Legion during its convention here last summer, reminds us that progress leaves its mark on all

These days one must expect to see a spit-and-polish color guard stepping it off resolutely to the strands of "Night and Day,' or "Love Is The Sweetest

Bang-Swish Keeps Fliers From Sleep

IANNED SPACE CENTER, Houston, Tex. (AP) — There are times when a descriptive phrase is more precise than the technical language of space.

Dr. Charles A. Berry, flight surgeon for the orbiting Gemin astronauts, was asked about the noise in a spacesuit component that kept the spacemen awake the first night. "It's sort of a bang-swish." aid Dr. Berry. "R's a metallic

Little To Say Things were going so smooth-for the Gemini astronauts at ground tracking stations at imes had very little to say as the spacecraft moved overhead. "All we have is a nice simple pass," said Gemini Control at one point Sunday. "All righty, we'll try to do those things for you," countered Navy Cmdr. James A. Lovell

r., pilot of the spacecraft. Status At Three One of the newsmen covering the flight of Gemini 7 thought that maybe there was some kind of code to inform Lovell if he becomes a father for the fourth time during his 14-day. five-million mile journey. One of the communicators earlier had told Lovell: "The crew status at the Lovell household remains at three."

Some 'Boy' Left Is there some of the boy left in the Gemini 7 spacemen. As he reported the food con-Force Lt. Col. Frank Borman the spacecraft copilot—said: Giving Homage to Christmas at the Wapping School "I ate everything but some pies. Jim ate it all in meal A. We're both saving our ginger-bread for dessert."

Norman Baudet and two pupils of his Grade 6 class at the Wapping School, Laura Meyers and Philip Flammand, appraise the Christmas display which seven class members have assembled in a school hallway. The carolers singing in front of simulated organ pipes really do sing—thanks to a concealed tape recorder beneath the display. Children who participated in the project, besides Laura and Philip, are Lorraine Paulhus, Richard McAlees, Linda Graushinski, Diane Kolakowski, and Pamela. The class was assisted by art teacher Al Koromanian. (Herald photo by Pinto.)
