The preliminary proposal is be forwarded to the State Soard for Regional Community Colleges by Jan. 15 for approval before being sent for exmination to the state's budget director and the building program commission, Each unit in the state system of higher education is required to submit such a long-term capital development program every two

A great deal of the planning in the proposal was based on figures in the recent study done or the community college board by Paul Orvis of the New York lystem. He proposed a series of 2 community colleges throughout the state serving a total of 12,000 students. In his report, he estimated an enrollment of 1,144 for Capitol East (Manchester Community College) in 1975 if all 12 colleges were in operation by 1972 and a projected enrollment of 1,720 in 1990 if all colleges were in operation by 1990. Krock's Indictment The severest judgment we have yet incountered on the Johnson administration's conduct of the issue of peace and war-severest because it is most matter-of-fact and because its source is as stolidly conservative as anyone could ask-appears in Arthur Krock's analysis, in the New York Times, of "the Fanfani affair."

Columnist Krock describes the time elements in the story, how "in a letter to President Johnson, dated Nov. 20, the Italian Foreign Minister, Amintore Fanfani, in proper service to his duty as current President of the United Nations Assembly, conveyed the gist of a conversation which two prominent Italan citizens said they had with the President and Premier of North Viet-

This letter was, according to Krock, turned over to Secretary of State Rusk who "with his advisers, pondered it for two weeks" before composing an answer. In this answer, dated Dec. 4, Rusk raised legitimate points of inquiry, and asked Fanfanl to try to get "clarification" of Hanoi's attitude on several of these points. "But meanwhile,' Krock continues on Dec. 15, eleven days after Rusk had taken the report of the two Italians seriously enough to suggest that Fanfani try to 'clarify' it, United States bombers made the first air strike on a major industrial target in North Viet-United Nations Ambassador Arthur

Goldberg, Krock continues, "has attributed this unique way of getting 'clarification' of an enemy's possible shift to peaceful intent to the fact that bombing programs are 'laid out in ad-Krock continues, "that these have often been changed or suspended for considerations of military or diplomatic pol-

Meanwhile, as Krock tells the story, a St. Louis Post-Dispatch reporter who had heard of the conversations in Hanoi, but not of the Fanfani-Johnson-Rusk correspondence which had been resulting from it, asked the State Department about it and was told "we are not taking this seriously." " That, according to Krock, was on Thursday,

On the basis of that State Department statement, the reporter wrote his story, along the line that although there had been a "feeler" the State Department was rejecting it. His story had no reference to the Fanfani-Johnson-Rusk correspondence because the reporter knew nothing about it.

Columnist Krock then proceeds, from that point in the story, to his own indictment.

"The release for publication of the Fanfani-Rusk correspondence, which was still unknown to press and public, and exploded any immediate step toward peace that might have been pending, was a decision of the Administration. Like the timing of the Haiphong area bombing, this publicityand not a negative and uninformed newspaper report—made certain Hanoi's retreat from any relaxation of the war it might, just might, have been disposed to make." Even before Mr. Krock's indictment appeared today, Ambassador Goldberg had made the candid admission that the administration was indeed suffering "a crisis of confidence" in which people were questioning whether "we in the Administration are really pursuing a path to peace." The Krock column today is merely one of many developments in the news which add to that

It Comes Easy To Our Times The top problem which Chancellor Erhard of West Germany brings to these shores is a stupidity which should never even be on the international diplomatic boards. If there is any greater folly for the present day world to discuss than the question of when and how just how much of a German finger shall be permitted to rest on the release mechanism of the nuclear weapon, we can't imagine what that greater folly could be. In this, as in many problems in the world today, one can use words like stupidity and folly without casting special indignity or reproach on any particular statesman or nation. We live in an age in which the idiocy is collective. It is endemic.

It is an idlocy of consensus. It arrives among us by some occult ractice of automation, having no la eled parentage, no known sponsors. Perhaps the issue of whether and sow and to what degree to give Germany anything to do with nuclear weapons is, after all, a little more tangible than our language has indicated. There are some slight wisps of rationality connected with it.

The United States, in developing the idea that it had the problem of finding some way to bring West Germany closer to the supposed satisfaction of nuclear weaponry, had to presume, from its own surface experience, that everybody naturally wants as much power of destruction as possible. That is, after all, the kind of world we posit. And a statesman of West German naturally has to calculate that however e feels, or however he thinks his nation ought to feel, there may be a substantial number of his fellow countrymen who do want what they might ordinarily be expected to want. So he has to behave as if he were protecting their possible want and interest, and has to advance a claim to nuclear weaponry because he doesn't quite dare decide to enounce such a claim. So we do our stupid things, we develop and expand our stupidities until they beome our absorptions, because policy makers in position of power and leadership never dare assume that the people they serve are not stupid. If leadership ever dared imagine that people are intelligent — intelligent enough, possibly, to label NATO itself the monstrous anachronism it is, intelligent enough, which ought to be puite easy, to sense the disastrous folly in trying to push atomic bombs into any new hands of any kind anywhere-if eadership dared imagine such intelligence on the part of people, instead of stupidity, it might find some of its own choices improving.

But leadership, let's face it, would not be completely eager for such an improvement of level and freedom in its choices. It is much more comfortable to keep on doing the stupid thing for stupid people. President Johnson and Chancellor Erhard, on that basis, can make quite a thing of trying to figure out how to satisfy what are supposed to be our generous instincts toward an ally and that ally's natural yearning for

Whereas, if they ever dared discuss the problem at hand with the assumption that the German people and the American people are intelligent peoples, they would throw the problem out the window after about 30 seconds, lest they insult both their nations by playpen palavers about the bomb while the world's house is already aflame.

day, in a dispatch written by one David

Willis from the city of Prague in the country of Czechoslovakia. Correspondent Willis was trying to tell the story of Prague, the golden city, struggling to retain its beauty under the strains of modern Communist materialism, and his eye and pencil were noting down some of the contrasts they encountered. Some things in the shops were beautiful, but prices were high,

Then came the unbelievable combination of word and thought, as follows: "The women on the streets were attractive, but their hair was untouched

The troublesome, the unbelievable word in this sentence is the word "but." Anything else would do, like "because": "The women on the streets were at-

Alarming Prospects

The NBC television network raised a rather frightening spectre of what may be in store for all viewers when it covered this weekend, simultaneously, the launching ceremonies of Gemini, while televising in another corner of the screen, the Penn State-Maryland football game.

hockey game running in one corner of the screen, Bonanza going on in another part of the screen, and the Boston Symphony performing in another corner. It perhaps will not be possible to work in the Huntley-Brinkley report unless the Bonanza people are training to hesitate dramatically between sentences so that Chet and David can squeeze in the news, during the pauses, or while the herd is riding off in all directions. Television presents its problems already in that viewers must decide what channel to select. But if to this quandary we are to add the decision of what corner of the screen to watch we will really have a nation of cross-eye schizoohrenics. And if we consult American istory, we very much fear that the listening prize may go to the network process, and now that we berin to summarize it we begin o realize that all the post mortems have a familiar ring, as if we had heard most of them before in reference to some other series of political debates, to be specific a 1960 series between one John F. Kennedy and one Richard Nixon. In 1965 in Connecticut as in 1960 in the nation, there has been considerable difference of opinion as to whether the figure who held the relatively inside position should ever have permitted the outside chalenger to talk him into the debates in the first place. This opinion holds that Alcorn gave Lupton an exposure and audiences he would never have been able to achieve for himself. It is, of course, the in-exposure, which was also the assumption with regard to In 1965 as in 1960 there has been some admission that judgment of the debate itself actually strayed into a kind of emotional reaction to the physical appearances of the two debaters. In 1960, it was supposed to be the dingy shadow on Nixon's jowls which handicapped him, making him look like some dark and threatening person. In 1965, there were viewers who confessed that they feared and distrusted Lupton because he was too handsome

But for the first time the emphasis is swinging toward sup-ply rather than demand — supof production facilities, suply of workers skilled enough to nan them. This could determine how 1966 shapes up. Consumer, business and government demands for goods and services are expected to go on expanding in 1966. Will the supy be enough to meet all of sem? Or will there be a pinch? And will this pinch mean rising prices or will it cause a slowin

Scouts Give Holiday Wreaths to Elderly

Scout Troop 603 of Bowers School presented five pine cone Christmas wreaths to residents of Laurel Manor Convalescent Home and Holiday House yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Julia Ballotti (in the foreground) receives a wreath from Maureen Maloney of 41 Byron Rd. while Mrs. Ruth Spencer (in the backbground) accepts a wreath from Marsha Giglio of 19 Tanner St. Both presentations took place at Laurel Manor Convalescent Home. As a troop project, the scouts gathered the pine cones, prepared them and then each of the seven parols made a wreath under the direction of Mrs. Alfred Barbero, troop leader. The troop presented two of the holiday wreaths to Miss Esther Granstrom, principal of Bowers School, for her cooperation in all scouting projects. The remaining five were given away yesterday after the scouts entertained the residents at a carol sing. (Herald photo by Pinto.)
