More Like Algeria

One of the saddest and most fronte desions of the war in Vietnam came the other day as our American commanders there launched the biggest single offensive of the war to date. It was an all-American offensive, with no South Vietnamese troops invoived in any way. And it was launched without previous notice of any kind to the South Vietnamese, whose allies we claim to be, whose country we claim to defend, whose desire for freedom we claim to consider our own sacred cause.

We chose to fight alone, in this projected big assault on the Vietcong "iron triangle" just outside Saigon, for a wide variety of reasons, including the difficulty of language communication between ourselves and our allies. But some of the other reasons were that we don't fight well together anyway, that our men don't trust the South Vietnamese soldiers to fight, that our military leadership doesn't dare honor, in battle, any system of joint command, that we can't trust the South Vietnamese not to be informing the Vietcong of where we are going to attack next, and that we can't trust the South Vietnamese not

According to a Herald Tribune dispatch from Washington the rate of desertions among the South Vietnamese "reached a peak last summer. . . . Then, as the American troop buildup began, the rate dropped. But recently, it's understood, desertions began rising

The more American policy counter acts this tendency by leaving the South Vietnamese out of our battles and out of our confidence the more the South Vietnamese begin to question whether this is really their war after all. The question becomes, then, one of whether there is an accursed law of diminishing returns at work, by which South Vietnam's own participation in the war shrinks as our own role magnifies, by which, possibly, the amount of fighting by the South Vietnamese decreases as the amount of fighting by Americans is stepped up, by which, perhaps fatefully, the very strength of our effort is losing to us the battle for hearts and minds which is basic in any possible success

More and more, in the attitude of the opulation, in the inability of the outside force to rely on the loyalty of its supposed domestic allies, in the actual decrease in the security of the countryside no matter how much the size of the professional outside army is increased more and more the shape of the war in Vietnam is becoming not that of the French in Vietnam before, but that of the French in Algeria, where a professional army of half a million men could sither win nor lose.

The Congress And We

It takes quite a mental effort to resember and realize, as Congress reasembles, that this is our own, such nstrument and voice and representation of the people as we have.

And it would take even more delving eneath either our surface humor about Congress or beneath our ingrained synicism about what we can normally expect from Congress to realize and remember that Congress does have its monents of representative greatness. This incoming session was being satalogued, even before its first gavel sounded, as one not expected to produce very much in the way of legislation, elemental reason being that previeus Kennnedy-Johnson sessions have already passed just about every kind of great society measure that could be est required to function under great gislative drives and urgencies of the ernul sort.

This would seem to leave it free to form some of the other potential otions of a legislative branch—like focuse where we are, and what we stand for, and where we want to go.

If any such debate of assessmen takes place, we are all likely to be dis appointed—or perhaps merely to feel our cynicism confirmed—as we discover that much of what is said in Congreen will not seem particularly wiser than we are ourselves, as we find reflected in the wide-ranging disagree-ments of these elected officials much of the same disunity of mind and view which exists among us, their constituents. Sometimes, to tell the truth, Congress reflects and represents us all too which we, and our Congress, face the crucial test of whether we can find and remember and implement our own best principles at the very moment we seem to have with us the ultimate in power and responsibility for dealing with the affairs of the whole world, the debate which would be part of this test is sure-

South Wind Cold

Walking down Main St. yesterday was not as pleasant as walking up. The wind was blowing from the

And, on an afternoon when the streets were melting, when the sun could be felt now and then through spring-like natches of cloud, the wind blowing from the South had an unpleasant chill on it. One could live forever and never shake all the conditioning which makes a chill wind from the South come against the cheek like a slap of betray-

North is cold and South is warm is as fixed in our mind as anything Kipling wrote about East and West. The poet Keats pleaded "for a beaker full of the warm South, full of the true, the blushful Hippocrene" and Norman Douglas wrote a novel titled "South Wind" which was full of warm and amusing passions. There is obviously scientific and meteorological explanation why, in spite of such certainties in the human mind, a blast of cold air will, on an otherwise pleasant January day, ride a South wind up Main St. It is probably something to the effect that even the cold winds that come to us from the North approach us in great pinwheel revolutions, so that the same cold winds blow first at us from the North and then come at u again, later on, from the South.

But for all the duty one feels to be come more knowledgeable, or more sophisticated about winds, or even to yield to the tutelage of repeated experience, so that one might learn to expect something that happens so often, there is no real cure for the way the cheel reacts. It goes out on a pleasant January afternoon, and turns innocently down the street, and a cold wind comes livers a stinging, insolent slap, and the inherited assumptions and precarious emotional stabilities one uses to get through life have been discombobulated for the rest of the day.

Firm Feeler To The UN

Ambassador Goldberg's letter to Secretary General U Thant does not exacty toss the Viet Nam affair into the United Nations' lap, but it seems to go Johnson has yet gone toward invoking the UN machinery as a supplement to or a substitute for, the United States

By repeating past invitations to UN members to "search for an acceptable ormula to restore peace and security to that part of the world." the lette continues the process of involving other nations and international agencies in a sort of free-world and neutralist protest against the creeping Communist aggression underway in Asia. This probably is better than letting the UN machinery sit and rust. Washington's orthodox position has been that the UN lacks both the political will and resources to deal effectively with Viet Nam. But there may be a desire now to test that position in whatever warm glow may be cast by the administration's current peace offensive. There must be, of course, a burning hope that the world's many skeptic now will agree that Asian communism not Yankee imperialism, is the aggres sor. But, be that as it may, the chief intent is to use thhe pressure of UN members, collectively or individually, to get Hanol to negotiate. Walter Lipp-

ginning the discussions and making it ncreasingly impossible for the other party to break them off." If this kind of pressure could be built up quickly, it might be felt on Mos-cow's Shelepin mission which headed for Hanoi yesterday under a cloud of mystery. But the pressure inevitably works both ways. If the United States manages to get talks started, it will be increasingly impossible for Washington to break them off too, without losing all the goodwill now a-building, and then

Washington's "unconditional" proach still carries the implied condion that North Viet Nam's aggression recognized and not rewarded at the conference table. If this remains in force, the only alternative may be a long bloody struggle, because North Viet Nam wants-South Viet Nam, one way

If the eventuality is to be American surrender of the anti-aggression prinwould want to share the onus. If the upshot is continued and growing war, administration will want the burden shared. Either way, it makes sense to sound out the UN now. - SPRING

The Democratic State and National Chairman may help the Republican State Chairman redistrict Connecticut, and operate Connecticut in some of its routine legislative business, but he is assuredly not going to go out of his own way to help Pinney elect a Republican Governor in November

This means that if Pinney ! really going to find out how to conduct that survey of poten tial candidates he has an nounced for himself, his instruction will have to come from friends, like us, rather than directly from Bailey.

Three Years Of Probation For Houston

WASHINGTON (AP)-The University of Houston, stunned with a three-year probation—one of the longest in NCAA history-expressed regret today. University officials said they'd try to see that it didn't happen again. Dr. Frank L. Stovall, chair man of the university's athletic board, and Athletic Director Harry Fouke said they "deeply regret that violations have occurred and have taken appropriate steps to make certain that violations do not occur in he future." Their joint statement came after the National Collegiate Athletic Association had prohib-
