After The Fire If the Country Club fire seems to have warmed the relationship between the private membership of the Mannester Country Club and the Board of Directors which represents the public wnership of the land on which the club erates, one can only say that it is The particular relationship which has been in existence ever since the town thase of the former Cheney Bros. tract has been inevitably difficult, and t has been natural enough that there should have been moments when the conduct on both sides has been something less than statesmanlike. The club mbership was perhaps guilty, for a dine, of thinking that it had some kind claim on the town, which entitled it continue on its site in the same comfortable fashion it had enjoyed during the private landlordship of Cheney Bros. And town policy, for a time, was anduly influenced by the jaundiced views of a few politicians who considared it a smart operation to exhibit nobbery in reverse, and try to persecute a private club just because it was These two extreme views-that the town owed the club something—and hat the town should do everything it sould to drive the private club out of xistence—have both mellowed and rielded to less emotional and more ractical considerations.

The club membership, for its part, has become reconciled to the fact that at does not own the land on which it rates, and to the probability that the town will never want to relinquish title to it.

And the members of the Board of Directors, for their part, have apparently come to recognize that the compromise system which has already operated during these test years—operation of the acilities by a private club with reasonable playing opportunities for members f the general public-is actually an deal solution of the town's problem. It recognizes that the existence and pospession of a private golf club is, as should have been obvious all along, an asset to the whole community. And, while maintaining such an asset, it gives Manchester people themselves adequate privileges in it.

All these considerations—warmed u by the fire which necessitated some long fined for its defiance of the law. range decisions about the club house itself-now seem to have produced an stmosphere in which town and club are ready to agree on proper long term arrangements between themselves. These arrangements would safeguard all the own's real interests, and at the same time permit the club an opportunity to expand and improve itself without fear of finding itself thrown off its own inrestment before it has had a chance to anjoy the benefits of its own expendi-

At the moment, all this rests on genterrible going-over. Hemanly assurances back and forth. The atmosphere is long overdue and relcome; let us hope the details and the legalities can be worked smoothly into the agreed intent of both parties. Dirksen's Latest

One has never known, with the good Senator Everett Dirksen, whether his more famous decisions have been those the chameleon or merely those of a deman slow to be persuaded. He has been, in candidacies from Illiois, alternately an internationalist and isolationist He fought for the passage of the civil ghts bill in 1964, which was the time be for it if one wanted to be with it when it was passed, and, in the same ar, he made the nominating speech r Barry Goldwater, who had the nomiation sewed up anyway.

ecisions have been so timely and so ght that he has been winning the outation of a statesman rather than at of a chameleon. But it is difficult to rule out the posslity that he is an uncanny mixture

In recent years, the majority of his

Whatever the mixture may be, it has w operated again, and perhaps most leantly, on the topic of the war in

Until the other day, Senator Dirksen d been acting and talking as if he, g with most of the other routine okesmen for his party, considered the publican opportunity with regard to m as an opportunity to keep mding President Johnson to get tougher, to jump on him if he showed signs of negotiating for something less than total victory. But the other day Senator Dirksen suddenly turned out of this routine to admonish his own party colleagues to be a little bit careful and consider the consequences before they carelessly advocated more escalation of the war in "This is not our war," the Senator told his party caucus. "This is a Vietnamese war. . . . It's easy to say back here, give 'em the works." As for the routine party cry to "bomb Hanol," Senator Dirksen had this

"I don't believe I have enough facts and information to make a choice. Pve got to be pretty sure of my facts." And he asked his fellow party members to think of the thousands of American boys now in Vietnam and "don't forget that the action you take is going to involve those youngsters." When reporters tried to pinpoint what might have been the inspiration for such a change in the Dirksen spirit and mind; he admitted that the report authored by Majority Leader Mansfield and his touring committee, including Republican Senators George Alken o Vermont and Caleb Boggs of Delaware, had indeed been influencing him, as it seems to have influenced everybody who has studied it. That report proved a sober document, which painted American victory as something much more distant and the possible spread of the conflict into World War III as something much more close and imminent than any other estimates have placed

But whatever the mixture of motivation and reasoning involved, Senator Dirksen has, for the moment at least, decided not to gamble his party's political future on a role which is exclusively that of the hawk. This is another of his surprises. It might prove to be the most famous and significant of them

The Bully Wins In the moment of the ending of the New York transit strike, there are emotional impulses which almost—but not guite-cover up the realities. With New Yorkers, the greatest thing the lives of millions, is that the strike itself is over, and the emergency ended. The strike was hurting so much that anything to end it seems relatively good and painless.

There is also a natural tide of sentiment running in favor of the new Mayor who was handed the strike problem even before he had assumed office. Mayor Lindsay is clean and nice and young and somebody not nice and clean and young was out to push him around and dirty him up, and so, as the incident ends, there is a gentlemanly, but arbitrary, instinct to label him the winthe fair-haired hero

And sometimes it seems that we run so much of our public life, in all our divisions from town to world, on the basis of one fiction or another that there seems no particular crime in letting a relatively pleasant set of fictions attach themselves to the end of the transit strike, and perhaps, who knows, even become accepted as the factual record. But there could be, at this moment, an unsentimental reading of the situstion which is much less pleasant. It may feel good to New Yorkers to have transit service back, but the price paid on their behalf has been very heavy, both in principal and in principle. The strikers got the most handsome raise in their history. And the strikers got away with defying the law, and are not to be punished or have their union

And it may be pleasant to think of handsome Mayor Lindsay as the hero, and one does have to give him credit for trying to resist, trying to hold to the law, trying to break up the collusion of the past between the union and City Hall, but the fact remains that, as punishment for trying to fight on this level and in this unorthodox way, in violation of the rules of the union-politics establishment, tough Mike Quill and his union actually gave the young Mayor a

Because nobody wants to make Quill a hero, the general disposition is to make Lindsay one. And this, to tell the truth, does have a justice beyond the facts. Quill obviously set out to beat up the new young Mayor. The Mayor is still standing. Like the young Kennedy with the Bay of Pigs, he has now been "blooded." He will be more capable and tougher, and a little wiser, too, for his

Snowball In Court One of the most natural things in life seems to be the affinity of small boys for

In fact, it has been given legal bearing in New York State where the Court of Appeals overturned an earlier award against a school because its teachers ailed to prevent snowball throwing.

In the opinion of the majority of the court: "No one grows up in this climate without throwing snowballs and being hit by them. If snow is on the ground as children come to school, it would require intensive policing, almost child by child, to take all snowball throwing out of

By comparison with parental supervision, which usually forbids snowball throwing only if dangerous or reckless, the court relieved the accused teachers and school of responsibility for one boy's Although the schools have regulations against snowball throwing, and it can be angerous, there is no law against it. erhaps there will be. Legislatures and ouncils have passed more bizarre proibitions, such as putting cats on leashes, out lawmaking is no final match for the mpulses of small boys and animals. — ATERBURY REPUBLICAN ****

Yesterday, a lot of people in Washington even were saying that the strike had made John Lindsay such a political name have a man near him for a Presidential nomination in 1968, But for the 12 days of the great strike, the people of New York were too busy and too tired from daily living and they never noticed what it was.
