alarm, and an occasional hope. The interest derives from the fact that she is a woman, from the importance of her country, and from the obvious fact that the identity and spirit and leaning of that country's leadership, in its second change since the loss of Nehru, is of immense importance to Indis and to the world.

Some of the alarms are contradictory. One reflects a fear that Mrs. Gandhi, laughter of Nehru himself and bearer of the name of India's liberator, may have nothing more than a famous name But another alarm is being sounded over the possibility that Mrs. Gandhi may have too much of a mind and force her ewn, which may be pointed in Birections American diplomacy may not ike. The "Constal Enclaves" Strategy recommendation from a noted genral, who once analyzed the logic of an American involvement in Vietnam, a comment by another general now inrolved in Vietzam, and an unofficial prediction of the latest policy inclinaion of the White House in Washington all add up to approximately the same formula for future American conduct in Vietnam if there is no formal immediate progress toward truce or negotiation. The formula these three sources seem indicate also happens to be the formula which has frequently been adranced in this space during the past Retired Lieutenant General James J.

Gavin was the Army's chief of plans and operations during the time the Eisenhower administration was considering going into a land war in Southeast

He thinks that our present course of action is threatening to stretch our own resources beyond reason in a location where expansion of our forces to the strength necessary to try to control the whole country would inevitably broaden the war beyond Vietnam.

As an alternative to the strategy we have been following in the past year, General Gavin suggests that we call off our bombing of North Vietnam permamently, and that we limit our military operations in South Vietnam to the business of holding coastal enclaves where our presence will serve the strategic purpose of denying conquest of the country to the Victoring for as long as it takes the Victoring to realize it is not going to realize its goals.

Meanwhile, and then, and always General Gavin thinks that the eventual solution has to be an international solution, sought at the United Nations or another Geneva Conference.

General Wallace M. Greene, Jr., commandant of the Marine Corps, returned from Vietnam the other day, and one of the things that expert commander of an expert fighting force said was this: "You could kill every Victoring and North Vietnamese in South Vietnam and still lose the war."

As for the report from Washington, intends to prosecute the war if no visi-ble progress toward truce or negotiation is apparent soon, that report sounds like a retteration of General Gavin's alter-

Since the normal silly interpretati of the Washington scene is that we have President who is silly enough to hange a policy if he finds anybody has rumored it in advance, it may be that he Washington report is not valid at all, but merely a sly plot on the part of the hawks who, despite the Marine Commander's warning, would like to kill as many Vietcong as possible and

But it is at least something to have such opinions, from such sources, and uch a prediction, coming into the news. Granted our involvement, granted the mpossibility of any unconditional withdrawal, granted the dim prospects for any immediate solution of any kind, granted the unlimited danger waiting around some corner, the next one or the one after that, or that, there has been, and is, and will remain, in the opinion of this corner, only one sand military policy for the United States in South Vietnam. That is to settle down and hold on to the territory we now have for as long as it takes to tire the other side out. "Stay and resist," the President himself once said, in the midst of many other words, some of which had almost opposite meanings. They would still be the right words, and the right command, if he can find the way to persuade all his generals, including some of our civilian generals, to give it a try.

Manchester's Nigerian Friends

Although it was during the regime of General Manager Richard Martin that the town of Manchester negotiated its special treaty of eternal peace and friendship with the new African nation of Nigeria, the people of that country can feel assured that no change in Manchester's foreign relations is likely to result from the appearance of General Manager Robert Welss on the Nigeria made among the people of Manchester during their warm and historic visit here is still a strong and lasting impression. They were not only handsome and friendly yet dignified human beings, in their colorful dress. They were also well informed, and intelligent, and intelligently curious. And they seemed, to those Manchester people who came into contact with them as Dick Martin led the town's hospitality to them, an unusually bright symbol of Africa's hopes for the future.

Today, we think, Manchester would again like to express its respect and good wishes for these visitors of a few years ago, and express its friendship and hope not only for these particular individuals, who seemed so well qualified to help lead their own country into the blessings of freedom, but for their whole country.

The affairs of that country, as we all know from the current headlines, are more complicated than they seemed in that Manchester yesterday. The hope for Nigeria is not as bright as the people we met seemed to deserve to have it be. The Dark Continent's brightest hope has, momentarily at least, flared into an

This is tragic. But nothing could more ridiculous than to say that this sudden burst of tragedy in the story of Africa's brightest hope proves that Africa should never have been freed, or left alone to try to govern itself.

We, in this country, are supposed! the brightest hope of the whole world, and we have had many years of unparalleled advantages in which to perfect curselves as the symbol and demonstration of that hope, and we still have moments of savage tragedy, and never think for an instant that we should give up the experiment because of such moments, or because there are times when we seem hopelessly incapable of living, among ourselves or in the world, by something higher than the law of the

along the newly opened Interstate Route 91 are disturbed—at least their sleep is disturbed—by the rumbling heavy trucks along the new highway. That they should be disturbed is unferstandable. Up until now there has been nothing to disturb them, except, perhaps, the mooing of a cow in summer or maybe the barking of a farm dog or the toot of an occasional train over the Airline Railroad, if they happened to live within earshot of the Airline and if a train happened to go by and toot while they were asleep.

The aggrieved residents have prothat the state plant a row of as noise breakers or sound absorbers. This is reasonable, and sho be done, if it is at all feasible. But it robably won't help much.

The simple fact is that the people ir the area have got to learn to get used to the noise. It won't take long: they'll be surprised. After all, if the people along Broad St. in Meriden, where the trucks ran within a few feet of their bedrooms night after night, year after year, can get used to trucks, the Nort Airline Road people can, too. Some of the people on Broad St. now can't get to sleep because it is so quiet.-MERIDER

Scouts Unpack Cookies for Annual Sale Members of the Girl Scouts in Manchester are busily preparing for the annual Connecticut Valley cookie sale which begins Monday and runs through Sunday, Jan. 30. Orders will be delivered between March 14 and 18. Scouts arranging the cookies for the sale include Jane Hickock and Marnett Ostrout, both of Troop 77, Elizabeth Sweetnam of Troop 642 and Nancy

Platz of Troop 681. Junior, cadette and senior scouts participate in the sale which gives the girls an opportunity to earn money under a council-sponsored project. Part of the proceeds emain in the troop treasury to defray expenses while the remainder is used by the council to provide camperships, to assist senior scouts with expenses for national and international events and to aid camp maintenance and development. Five varieties of cookies will be offered for sale this year. They are chocolate and vanilla sandwich creames, thin mints, sugared shortbreads, peanut butter patties and sugar wafers. Mrs. Richard Sweetnam is town chairman. She will be asisted by Mrs. William Meldrum, southwest neighborhood; Mrs. William Zimmerman, northeast; Mrs. Charles Campbell, central; and Mrs. Weyant Garrison, northwest. Anyone wishing to purchase cookies, who is not contacted by a scout, may contact Mrs. Sweetnam, 198 Hollister St. (Herald photo by Pinto.)
