These two witnesses were neither swits nor doves, as such. They were not so much in love with either war or with peace that their emotional instinct or their moral conviction predetermine everything they would say. They would be of relatively small comfort to Senator Morse, who occupies hat seems the most emotionally intense position against the war. But meither would they be of comfort to resident Johnson, who continues gound ag if he were being governed, in mach clutch decision, by a great and intense emotional loyalty to the war nto which he himself has the responsibility of commanding American lives and sacrifices. What the testimony of the General and the Ambassador offered was, ather, the brand of expertise in which supposedly had qualifications ad experience enough to have rendered stinguished previous service to the

The General discussed elements of strategy and logistics, with a backdiplomacy and statesmanship. And the Ambassador discussed elements of diomacy and high policy and world reships, which would be the area of his own special competence, while, at the . same time, he had some background of awareness of military and strategical

Presumably a great deal of this kind discussion has gone on behind the losed doors of the Johnson administration's high deliberations during the past two years of high concentration on the have of Vietnam.

And it is quite possible, as the President himself claims, that when this discussion comes out in the open for a few days before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, it reveals that the real differences over policy in Vietnam are not as extreme as some people have thought them to be.

This much is true. There has never been any real debate or division between positions so moronically simple they can be labeled "win" or "withdraw." The President himself has purse. whrased the policy of many of those who eriticise him into being a policy of

"withdraws!" in order to attack and refute it the more easily. But the real argument, the only argument advanced by responsible rather than merely emotional people, has been, all along, over the question of who should escalate this war—the United States or the other side. The President's leadership has become controversial because he has, although with occasional pain and reluctance, given those orders which have continually enlarged the commitment of American lives, Ameriean killing power, American prestige to what such occasionally respected techmicians as General Gavin and Ambassador Kennan feel to be the wrong kind

Quite obviously, no American, policy maker or layman, would care to buy all significances of this Chinese Communiat blast.

But the central assertion it makesthat Soviet Russia is trying to stay close enough to North Vietnam and trying to help North Vietnam enough to get some veto over what North Vietnam does and then use that veto to bring about some truce between North Vietnam and the United States—that is a possibility and a hope which is indeed part of the pic ture. We may know for sure some day and we may never know for sure. But Communist Chinese propaganda may, for once, be telling the truth.

But his main objective is going to be the same thing it would be if he were running for President. He is going to campaign to bring peace to Vietnam. So spring comes, once again, to Pennylvania. And it is, when it comes with Stassen as its harbinger, the best possible kind of spring, truly the one that "springs eternal."

The appearance of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on television has led some imaginative Manchester people to wonder, out loud, whether there not something hauntingly familiar about one of the figures on that austere Washington committee. There is a cartain member who combines the behavior inveterate mayerick with slashing tongue of the prosecutor with the sly inner smile of the Machiavelli, and who suggests, in such appearance and behavior and buoyancy, even down to the friendliest twinkle which signals look out for the stiletto, a certain character public on the Manchester scene. Are there two of them? Or is it one spirit leading a double existence, flitting, by some occult means of transportation, back and forth between sessions of the Senate in Washington and the public convocations of the Shadow

Board in Manchester? One does not like even to suggest very searching experiments into the realm of the occult and the possible transference of flesh and spirit. But if it could be arranged to have the Board of Directors of Manchester holding a hearing on some public question, say a country chub lease, at the same time the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in Washington is examining some witness on the war in Vietnam, and if R could be further arranged to have the Washington hearing on television In the meeting room of the Board of Directors, then we should be able to see for ourselves, whether there really are the two of them, in two different places at the same time.

A squash and a head of lettuce are in the news. And rightly. It is no small honor to be picked as winners of the All-American vegetable award for 1966. The horticultural competition is sharp. Always there is someone who is working at bringing out a redder radish, a dumper pumpkin, or cucumber capable turning into a crisper pickle.

What did these two vegetables have that made them top winners? The squash, named Gold Nugget, is a sweet, meaty globe of softball size. Kitchenette cooks will welcome it. The quality of the lettuce is described by its name Butter King. Big and tender, no doubt. it derives from a strain developed in israel. Many a salad bowl will be wait ng for it.

Now we wonder what future All-American contents will bring. We can think of many improvements that could be made in this nation's vegetables. For example, there is the problem of the crackly celery which adds one more sound to the clatter and din of restaurants. Could not the garden experts give us a noiseless stalk? String beans have already been made stringless, a real la-bor-saving improvement. How about growing them frenched (alit), as they come from the frosen package? Then there is the spinach problem facing so many thousands of the new generation. How about a candy-flavored variety,

Mr. Seedman? We look forward hopefully to the "All-Americans" of the future. Growers who changed the once-rough cucumber to a smooth, sleek number, and who defuzzed the peach can be expected to SCIENCE MONITOR

according to the latest quarterly estimate announced by the National Broadcasting Company. This total represents an increase of 2,410,000 color TV households a gain of more than 85 per cent over the Jan. 1, 1965 color household figure of 2,810,000. The number of color homes added during 1965 was double the increase in color home circulation during 1964. The company added there are very favorable prospects for a greatly expanded color audience in 1986, citing the vastly enlarged capacity of tube and receiver manufacturers to meet the continued strong consumer demand for color sets, as well as the outlook for increased consumer nurshasing power in
