And if we Connecticut people, visiting down below, think we encounter a teste of the Hudson, and have some instinct to draw back from it, we had perhaps better discipline ourselves. Some of us may, in our time, enjoy the mestionable distinction of drinking

Cold War Myths

The obsession with external aggre sion which burdened us so long in Europe has now changed its roost to Asia. The analysis is the same; only the object is different. Now that the Russians have begun to mellow, the spector of Cossacks sweeping to the Channel i Tae-tung picking up all the states of Sea of Japan like falling dominoes. While this, to be sure, is an awful prospect, it is not a very likely one, since freedom of action to impose its will on bark upon a policy of direct aggression against their neighbors, this can be met by a judicious application of American Russia, which has even more reason to terested nations as well. But fomenting ever irritating and unfriendly, is not the same as direct aggression. And while the creation of stable, non-Communist governments on the Asian main-land is an eminently desirable goal, it is American military power.

The futile attempt to do so in Vietnam is simply the most dramatic example of how the old dogma has lived on to haunt our rhetoric and defeat our diplomacy. Although the postwar world dominated by those twin symbols of intransigence, Dulles and Stalin, has largely been eroded, the facade remains intact in the vocabulary of the outworn doctrines. Largely inappropriate to the political realities of plain a good many of our current in-volvements. Doubly mischievous, they not only inspire interventions of ques tionable wisdom, but provide the justifications for them once undertaken.

It is not only the public, but the polcy-maker as well who suffers from this cultural lag, for those whose job it is to deal in realities have in fact become prisoners of their own rhetoric. So used explaining every American involvenent anywhere in the world-whether t be furnishing Cuban exile pilots to Tshombe or sending a gymnastics instructor to Guatemala—as part of the struggle between "freedom and Communism." they end up believing themseives the cold-war pablum which they feed the public. The mythmaker becomes a mythmonger, as chained to his myth as Elvis Presley to his guitar. Even if he wanted to he could not scuttle the old dorma without seeming to betray the very princi which he has been proclaim ing to Congress and the voters with tiresome and predictable ardor. The mythmonger's excuse for chant ing the old dogma, insofar as he himself is aware of its irrelevancy, is that the public is too unsophisticated to understand the nuances of foreign policy. But this, too, may be an "old myth" that has dragged on indecently long and should be given an early burial. The publie is not as stupid as its leaders imagine, and in a good many instancessuch as its favorable reception to Sen-ator Fulbright's minor heresies, and the more fundamental criticisms of our Asian policy made more recenty by Senators Church, Morse, Gruen-Mansfield and McGovern-may be ahead of official wisdom in its freedom from cant and self-justifications. The voters are rarely as chained to any particular line of policy as are the pro fessionals whose job and whose self-re spect are attached to those policies, and they are often willing to consider a good

Perhaps we are barking up the wrong tree in blaming the public for hanging onto the old myths. In truth it seem to be the policy-maker, not the vote who sees his assumptions as the epitom of political wisdom. To get him to con template the possibility that some of these may be outdated, or actually harmful, is to challenge much that he holds dear. "The really dangerous myths," as Irving Kristol commented lightened populace; they are lodged ernment." Prying them loose from that citadel is a task of heroic proportions. It is also one of urgent necessity, for with all the talk of "new realities," the old and cherished myths hang on with world in a fog of tiresome rhetoric, they hobble the mythmonger even more than a dogma-weary public, and paralyze the mgton Birthday Sale. It was only Monday they captured the trolley and so far they had been shot at, broken down with a leaky loco-boiler. and now nature was slipping them a fast run. Only a few hours before when they shot a star they also realized they were off their course, just outmide Terrington, a notorious Tory town; this was only a minor problem, however, and they just moved the track. The snow-covered tracks continued to make it impossible for the little trolley to gain track-shun. It would no sooner gain a wheel of progress than it would slip two wheels back. Our heroes realized at this rate they would have no wheels left and be unable to carry the goods to Manchester because their stevedore membership had expired. They were the victims of a union which had splinter-ed into a multitude of unions and they were too far out in the wilderness to benefit from a closed shop. Yes, they were chilled waifs in a blinding blizsard without benefit of a stopover lease for one night's lodgback-track a mile or two, the Colonials put their heads together (clank), got off the trolley (thud), and hitched two massive chains to the slipping trolley and pulled; and—with a bit of a grin they buckled down (several of them not only buckled, but collapsed) to the job to be done and they did it.
