The Least We Can Do When he signed the new Veterans Benefits Bill yesterday President John-

We are saying to the brave Amerian boys who serve us . . . that your country is behind you. To say this does not mean that all Americans agree . . . on every policy or every commitment, but it does mean that once that policy is established . . . we support fully the young men who are the spearhead of that policy." It is pleasant to see that the Presiient, even though he himself has previously made comment which has seemed to infer that those who differed with his policies were somehow failing the roung soldiers he has ordered into batde, has now come to a moment when he recognizes the fact that all Americans who retain either sanity or humanity wish nothing but the best for the young Americans who, at the President's orders, are putting their lives on the line. There are some Americans who cannot bring themselves to believe that this is a right war for us to be waging, and who, therefore, think the finest kind of policy support that can be given to young Americans in uniform is to seek an honorable end to the conflict, an end which might involve neither victory nor defeat.

But the President was right in claim ing that none of this division applied to he subject matter of the bill he signed

This new measure revives, retroactive to 1955, and with the spread applying not only to veterans of military action out to all who have served a minimum of six months in any armed service, the benefits previously enacted for veterans of World War II and the Korean police action. It will provide veterans $100 a month plus dependent's benefits for 36 months of college, aid to low interest housing loans, assistance in medical care, and preference in federal employment opportunities.

Congress, in writing the bill, was more generous than the White House asked it to be; the President, in his remarks at the signing, pretended to be upset by this generosity.

But he wasn't really upset by it. He was pleased by it, and so, we think, are most Americans. Being generous, in such respects, to the young men who serve their country in uniform, who, by their donning of that uniform, surrender their own flesh and blood to the will of their Commander-in-Chief, is just about the least thing this country can do for them in return. There are many things about modern war civilization cannot afford. It cannot afford its ingenious barbarism and brutality; it cannot afford its dead end failure to distinguish, in its rewards and results, between victor and defeated; it cannot afford the destructive stupidity with which war turns man's most advariced scientific and technological talents against his own highest human values and potentialities. The only thing we can afford about modern war is the money, and especially money for the good benefit of the human beings who do the fighting for us.

Will Guatemala Vote Free? A New York Times Washington deseateh tells some of the efforts our diplomacy in Guatemaia has been making to get the military dictatorship there to permit a fair and free election when that country's presidential voting is conducted on March 6. The Times despatch, written by Richard Eder, explains why Washington is so concerned over having Guatemals per cent of its gross national product parceled out to the UN-about .035 per conduct a free, non-rigged election. Washington, he reports, is afraid "that Guatemala could replace the Dominican Republic as the hemisphere's

most dangerously explosive area." "Some officials here," he continues, "concede that Guatemala represents one of the most conspicuous failures of United States policy. The United States, fearful that President Jacobo Arbens Guzman was leading the country into Communism, intervened in 1954 to asgist in his overthrow. The vacuum was filled by military men who succeeded

"This prospect appears dim to most officials here. In a free election, it is believed, Mr. Mendez Montenegro would defeat Col. Juan de Dios Aguilar, who has the unofficial support of the Government, and Col. Miguel Angel Poinciano, who is farther to the right. But the army, though divided in its suppost of the two colonels, appears to be united in a determination not to let Mr. Mendez Montenegro become President.

"As seen here, the most likely prospects are that the voting will be rigged to ensure Colonel Aguilar's victory or, if Mr. Mendez Montenegro does win, that the army will move to keep him from Such the assessment, from Washington today, of the present state of political affairs in Guatemala, the country President Eisenhower and the CIA protected from Communism in 1954. Conceivably, what exists there now, although failure, is better than what might have existed had Communism actually taken over. But it is also conceivable that the worst has not ve come to Guatemala, and that, when it does come, it may amount to Communism after all.

Open And Shut With Maine

Now if we here, in this space, had followed our first instinct, and written something congratulating the good people of the state of Maine on having voted to keep their Sunday a Sabbath as far as vile liquor was concerned, we would have felt obligated, after the first official count game in, to compose another piece, lamenting the departure from Puritanical steadiness of our New

And if we had engaged in the correct the state had, after all, voted for wet Sundays, by a margin of some 132 vote out of some 203,000 cast, then we would next have been obliged to undertake still another piece this one showing that we had never, after all, lost confidence in the people of Maine, For the next thing that happened was a report that official count had now been changed, leaving Maine Sundays dry again by a margin of some 56 votes. We avoided all that retroactively involved toll and trouble. We think, as we approach the sub of Maine Sundays for the first tim that they are staying dry. But we have been living, in our imag > mation, through the alternating outcomes we have just chronicled. And we have, as a result, come to the conclusion that an election is an impossibly unsatisfactory and uncivilized way of resolving such a question.

Why in the world should 132 people, or 56 people, ever be allowed the privilege of determining the Sunday conduct and privilege of all the people of the state of Maine, who number approximately 1,000,000?

What can possibly be fair about allowing half the voters of a state, plus 132, or plus 56, decide what the personal conduct of the other half of the state's population is going to be?

Is there anything more tyrannical than the rule of such a majority? Anything, that is, except for an equal power yielded into the hards of some minority? Can any of us really defend leaving determination of such issues to the ballot box? Is the argument made that, imperfect as it is, this is the best way, most democratic way we have of resolving such issues? Why not resolve such issues in the really free, democratic way, which would be fair to everybody? Let those who want to drink on Sunday, drink, Let those who want to keep Sunday dry shun the stuff. Then everybody could be happy-everybody, that is, who would be willing to just mind his own busitions to the people of Maine, we think, on having voted Sunday dry, on the most recent count.

Erickson still has, even though he is retired, opinions on pub-lic gambling habits. And he was insisting yesterday that the lottery is a powerful game.

"The lottery will produce big money," he said "You have to promote it right and you'd have everybody in town playing it. The amount? Oh, you can get guys to throw around big figures and they don't mean anything. Study the thing and see what it can bring and then go out and get it. There's plenty to get." There is. For the last three months, to give an example, I have been playing a dollar a day on number 918. I'm going to change the number right now because if 918 ever hits, the people I owe money to will come into the place after me and create a bad fire violation. The number for the day, the way I play it, is determined by the last three numbers of the total mutuel handle of the major track operating, in today's case Hislesh. Now this dollar bet is part of what is known as the policy numbers racket. The odds on a number coming up should be 1,000-1. But since

Stock Exchange Gets Invitation From Stamford

STAMFORD (AP) — Mayor Thomas C. Mayers and the Stamford Chamber of Commerce are out for big game: they want the New York Stock Exchange to move to Stamford. They Put the Wind to Work for Play

The winter sun hides behind a cloud, and Mrs. Walter Schultheis glides in for a well-earned cup of coffee.

Anyone who has skated on a lake when here's a stiff breeze blowing knows that he feet don't have to do much work except on the upwind trek. As a child, nearly every skater at one time or another has made some sort of sail to catch more of the wind, to go a little faster down the ice. And who hasn't, on a particularly fair, blustery day, envied the owner of an ice boat?

Skaters in the Bolton Outing Club have improved on childhood designs and made he next best thing to an ice boat, under the patient guidance of club president Robert Foulke, a Trinity College professor, who brought his love of skate sailing and his sails, from his native Minnesot to his present home by Bolton Lake. Under his direction, just before Christ mas, club members set about making

It should be stated most emphaticall that the making of a sail is much more complicated than the using of it. For-tunstely, the lake did not present a surface smooth or safe enough for the sport until the middle of February, by which time most of the members had completed the necessary sewing and carpentry.

Two sail-making bees were held in the huge basement of the Robert Gortons' home on Brandy St. Sewing machines whirred at one end; power tools at the other, while men, women and children crouched on the floor cutting seemingly endless yards of green and white awning material (cheaper than sail canvas).

The sewing done, sticks were threaded through the sail, bowing it to a graceful curve at one end. Grommets were hammered in for lines; the two cross spars were laced together, the sail strung up, and it was ready to fly. Lines loosened, spars removed, the sail rolls up easily for carrying and storing.

The completed sails can really rush

you across the ice. Just rest one spar upon your shoulder, grab the other spar, tuck the sail against your ankle, put one skate in front of the other, and lean into the wind. To change direction, lift the sail above your head as you reverse position. Tacking into the wind can be accomplished, sometimes, but is a little difficult in the changeable winds on Bolton Lake, as any summer sailor knows. No outing club member has yet worked up to the speed of veteran sailor Foulke, who swoops across the lake on his racing skates faster than any skier schussing down a hill. Foulke swears his skates have never left the ice, but, watching him go, who would say for sure?

It's a long row to sew. Mrs. Philip Dooley starts her sail.

'Just which way is the wind coming from?' Beth and John Gorton are trying to find out, but Mrs. Walter Schultheis (back to camera) knows.

'And this is what it will look like when it's done.' Foulke, center, rigs a sail—with help from Dr. Peter Gram and daughter Cathy, as the ladies go right on sewing.
