The Spring Harvest; Sugaring-Off in Bolton

While others wait for spring behind garden catalogs, Dr. Bernard J. Sheridan and his family tap 18 stately sugar maples around the Sheridan home on Hebron Rd., Bolton, and pray for cold nights and warm days, the ideal weather to gather the watery maple sap, which they boil down into syrup for leisure breakfasts and for very welcome gifts, "Doc" learned the art as a boy. Since then the plastic bag (right) has replaced the galvanized pail (they are easier to carry and store—and keep the bugs out of). Here, foreman Sheridan stands by the steaming "still" while daughters Julie and Kathy and son Dennis bring in a day's drippings. Son Barry also helps with the enterprise.

Sediacek had attended North. Dennis transfers the harvest from plastic bag to pail.

Ancient promises of spring.

Then, into the milk can, as Kathy steadies the strainer.

For the final stage, the nearly-done syrup is brought indoors, where Mrs. Sheridan boils it to 219 degrees, strains it, and pours it into cans. She says

In the evaporator, the sap bubbles gently until it reaches 210 to 213 degrees. This takes about five hours with a tended fire, ten with a fire stoked and left to glow all night. Forty gallons of sap boil down into one gallon of syrup.

The Sheridans make eight or nine gallons each spring.

Add Spring Statistics It now goes joyfully into the record that in the dusk of Friday, March 18, just about 48 hours before the official arrival of spring on the calendar, the peepers found their 1966 voices.

This is the statistic some regard much more highly than that chronicling the first arrival of the red-winged blackbirds, even though the blackbirds usually are first. This year, for instance, the red-wings were here in the first week of March, and this is the third week of the month. But, although there are all kinds of ways to entice and beguile the red-wings north, the peepers have to have the temperature laid out on a line for them-a line right through the middle of their lowland fastnesses-before they begin to sing the spring. And, with all due regard to the friendly folk-singng raspitone with which the red-wings perform, there has never been so pure a high note, not even by the great Joan Sutherland, as that the peeper sends into sweet domination of the first truly warm twilight.

"Stand-In" Issue May Be Real For some time, various Republican olicy spokesmen at Washington have een pointing to inflation as one of the otential big issues in the paign next fall. And one intelligent analysis of this Republican strategy has said that it is primarily a stand-in issue the Republicans are using while they wait to see which way the war in Vietnam can best be exploited to their party's advantage. Are they going, next fall, to attack President Johnson for being too timid in Vietnam? Or for being too reckless and rash? They can't tell yet, so they tread water on that issue while they talk about inflation

It begins to look, however, as if the Republicans were going to find their stand-in issue a real live one. The nation's wholesale price index in February took its sharpest upward turn since the days of the Korean war.

More convincing than such statistics and more productive of real political mileage in the realm of inflation-are such developments, not yet reflected in any index, as the advance of the price of beer by a cent a can or the price of cigarets by a cent a pack. When inflation gets around to price increases of this nature, it really begins to hurt, and it really begins to develop a political potential. But, although it may be items such as cigarets and beer which first begin to draw serious public attention to the issue, the validity of inflation as a political issue lies elsewhere. It lies in the possibility that here, on the economic front as on some other fronts, the Johnson administration has piled unrealistic sweet talk on top of gross miscalculations, until its actual accomplishment has to be added up to one of having led us more deeply into difficulties we should never have been allowed to enter in the first place. Once we find ourselves hurtling sky-ward in an untethered, uncontrolled fationary balloon, the Johnson adminstration can be counted upon to present s with all kinds of leadership heroics, which we, the people, will be called pon to make all kinds of emergency sacrifices and accept all kinds of emer gency restrictions upon our living. The son administration does not lack for tslent in sharing with its people the all fruits of the disasters into which it smally cast a critical eve on the rec-

The basic crime of the Johnson administration with regard to inflation may be a relatively simple, innocent one. It just hasn't been able to bring itself to say no to any part of the wonferful bonanza prosperity this country has been enjoying—these so many unonly showed dubious control; he inditoken months of prosperity. When it as been boasting about this immunity rem any interruption of the prosperity rend, the Johnson administration has and deliberately stimulated a little recessionary slowdown in the economy, because it did show signs of running away into some inflationary stratosphere, as it may be doing now. One version is to say that President Eisenhower dared take a little frosting off the cake, to slow down the eating thereof. So far the Johnson administration has been pretending that it, and we, can all have ur cake and eat it up too, just as fast as we please. Time and experience may show that it should have had a little more realism and a little more courage.

This Laggard Humanity With equal celerity, the mobs of India riot over a tangible as precious as food, or over an intangible, so infinitely more precious, like language. The food riots take place because this nodern wonderful world of ours is still so cumbersome in its management of its affairs that there can be actual threat of starvation of thousands of people within reach of our television cameras. There isn't enough food to go around. Mobs fight for what there is. One day there were 13 human beings dead not of starvation but of the violence created by the fear of starvation; the next day there were 9 dead; another

When Indians don't riot to the death over food, they will riot to the death over language. At the moment, they have been rioting over the decision of the central government to partition the existing state of Punjab to crease two states, one to be a separate state where the Sikhs can have their own language as official. This decision by their own national government enrages the Hindus, who riot against the Sikhs. And, once again, it has to appear that this wonderful modern world of ours doesn't organize itself very well-not when it still can't devise some way for people to speak and use their own lan-

Nor is this lack of good organization limited to some new country like India, so inexperienced and unsophisticated. We have the same kind of language war, with emotions just as violent even if the actions are somewhat more restrained, in the cultured-but twin-cultured-old European state of Belgium.

how to organize itself to accommodate the fact that different people like to cling to different languages. Nor is it merely in India or in Europe that modern twentieth century humanity finds itself baffled by problems one would think it ought to solve. There was a statistic, the other day,

Wouldn't one think, that with our capacities for getting things done, with our unmatched wealth and resource, and with our historic admiration of free education for all, we could somehow have managed by this time to have devised ourselves some system for dragging these other 5,000,000 Americans into the proper speaking and writing of

As we note these failures on the part of civilization, we also note that these failures still exist after a few thousand years of conscious and devoted human effort, and we have begun to veer, therefore, toward the idea that we should now begin feeding such problems into our computers, and see if they come up with anything that would get food to Indian mouths, get language peace and tolerance to Belgium, and get language itself to all the people of the greatest and wealthiest nation in his-

Scott Takes Trip To Get Teachers

Ronald Boott, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, has recently returned from a "teacher recruitment trip" to Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York.

The trip was necessitated by a shortage of teachers, particularly in the fields of industrial arts. library science, reading, chemistry and physics. Connectjeut celleges do not produce enough teachers for the states needs, according to Scott, while Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York produce an overabundance.

While on the nine day trip. Scott visited five colleges in Ohio, two in New York, and one in Pennsylvania, Many interviews were held, but no candidates hired as yet.

Comic Joey Bishop is smiling again these days after a painful back injury that idled him several months. He wore a three-pound brace while subbing for Johnny Carson but has given it up now. His current role is that of an Indian in a Dean Martin movie. What kind of Indian? "Nava-jew," says Joey.

Mrs. Calabash Is Identified

The show business publication 'Variety" reported from Washington this week that Jimmy Durante had finally revealed the identity of the mysterious Mrs. Calabash to whom he has always wished a fond adieu at the end of his television and radio programs.

It was his first wife, Jeanne, who died more than 20 years ago. When they were first mar-Calabash, and that somehow became his nickname for his, wife. The line, "Goodnight Mrs. Calabash, wherever you are" started out as a personal greeting on radio to his wife, and la-

Fair Lady" on Broadway and in London for almost four years and toplined "Camelot" in New York for two more but she gets nervous doing TV.

"Why, I don't exactly know," said Julie as she wrapped a skirt around a lavender leotard and dropped into a nearby chair alongside guest-star Gene Relly in the bustling studio. She was on a short break during rehearsals for the first of her own television specials, "The Julie Andrews Show". This color program will be repeated on NBC Wednesday at 9 on Channels 22 and 30.

Julie was reminded that, even if she acted tired, she at least sounded chipper. "Yes," and I sound more so as we get nearer show-time," she said. "It's a nervous chipperness - and I usually get the giggies, too."

This bit of candidness promted a question about what she really was like. Her answer: "T think I'm just a fairly normal madcap among a bunch of fantastic madcaps." Her sweeping gesture took in all of the cast and crew, probably all of show business.

The "normal" part of her she attributes to the way she was brought up-"quite strict." De-

'Ben' Done; Spy Series Takes Over

The first program in the series, "The French Revolution," was presented in January, 1966, and was followed by "The Mid-die Ages," in May, and "The Spanish Armada," in November, Spanish Armada," in November both 1965. "The scope of the 'Of Men and Freedom' series," Vices announced before the first telecast, "is to outline the roots of our Western heritage and to provide a portrait of our evolution toward our present traditions and oustoms.

Consistent with these objec-"The Reformation," according to Vicas, "deals with the great spiritual conflicts of the 16th century, when men, struggling to break away from the constricting atmosphere of medieval religion, evolved a new approach to Christianity, but, in so doing, shattered—perhaps forever -- the unity of the Christtan church."

The program is focused upon three men in particular, all re-table so you can get the toast ligious reformers; Martin Lu- the color you like. ther, John Calvin and Ignatius the great architects of the Protestant Reformation; the third, St. Ignatius, founder of the Jesuit Order showed one way of reforming the Catholic burning," Carol said.

"However," Vicas says, "the program is not about theology, but rather about how and why men were persuaded or forced to adopt new religious beliefs, and how these beliefs shaped the new society in which they lived and were, in turn, shaped by the demands of the societies in which they lived."

in doing so I kicked off a glass ashtray. I climbed under the table to pick up the broken pieces and heard a woman scream, Harry, there's glass in your scrambled eggs.

"Well, there was, so I or-dered more eggs for him and he got down on the floor to help me with the glass and we bumped heads and then he yelled because he had cut himself. Then, I raised my head and hit the table and spilled coffee all over my script.

"Finally I was back at the table reading my script. Everyone was buzzing so I didn't look

Just like the episode in the restaurant, comedy abounds in Carol Plus Two.

"The emphasis is on comedy rather than music and I tell you that working with Lucy and Zero was like getting free tuition to a school for comedy," Miss Burnet said. 'Lucy's too cuch. One sketch in the show is hysterical, I really think it will be a classic.

"I've been so lucky. When Julie Andrews and I did our special, we had a wonderful chemistry. Then I worked with era" says she was the only girl Robert Preston on the second in the history of the Pittsburgh special and we had the chemis-

> "Now I find it again working with Zero and Lucy," Carol said. 'People say to me, 'That must have been something, with three comics working together, Well, there was never one moment of tension among us. We laughed the whole two weeks we were together. It was like three Dinah Shores meeting under the mistletoe."

'Green Hornet' Will Be Straight Not for Laughs

ABC has come to two big deislons. It will have "The Green Hornet," an adventure series played straight instead of for laughe, on its Friday night schedule next season. And it has decided to put its big expensive experiment in anthology entertainment, "Stage '66" into the 10-11 p.m. EST Wednesday spot.

NBC's next audience quiz program, on April 20, will test politics. It will be called "Testing: Right, Left or Center ?"

"CBS Reports" will take a look at "The Policeman's Lot" trating on the work of New York and Chicago departments ABC did something similar carlier this month with "The Thin Blue Line."
