Equal Voters Not Free To Vote As the Dirksen amendment came t to this year's vote in the United States Senate, it had been rewritten so that there could be little quarrel, in principle, with the small-d democracy of its con-

The emendment that a favorable twothirds vote would have sent out to the states for ratification would, if it were ever ratified, permit individual states to vote to have themselves one house of their legislatures apportioned on the basis of considerations other than population. States which voted to do so, in short, would be permitted, constitutionally, to have one house which would give representation to geographical and colitical units like towns or counties.

This was the basic amendment. What was new, this year, was the added stipulation that only states which had actually complied with the existing reapportionment mandates of the Supreme Court and the Federal District Courts would be entitled to vote on the ratifieation of the Dirksen amendment. What this eliminated was any possi-chity that states which should persisently refuse and delay reapportionment would somehow manage to keep old-style legislatures in existence long enough to vote for the retention of the old system to which they themselves

never get back to any part of the legislative system which was routine and traditional in this country until the Supreme Court rewrote the Constitution in 1964 unless we did it by the vote of legislatures which had themselves been elected under the new one-man-one-vote standards decreed by the Supreme Court

This proposal to let the people themselves have a fair chance to decide was defeated in the Senate Wednesday because, when it needed two-thirds of those voting, it got only 55 affirmative votes, as compared to 38 votes against, thus losing because it failed to get seven additional affirmative votes. There were 26 Democrats and 29 Republicans in favor of the Dirkser amendment, and 35 Democrats and 3

Republicans opposed. As for the basic explanation of the vote, it seems to have been that those to whom the Supreme Court ruling has now handed additional political power are now no more willing to surrender any portion of that new power than some of the old rotten borough political systems were willing voluntarily to surrender the tight and sometimes strangling hold they had on some of our state political processes in the days before the Supreme Court ruling.

But to substitute one entrenched po-Mtical greed for another is not necessarily very much progress. And as for statesmanship, if there had been an overwhelming amount of that present in the Senate when it voted on this issue, there would have had to be many more senators who would have taken an honest look at their own posttion, and at the system of representing and districting by which they themselved are elected. For they are, of course, the great national rotten borough, with their Senate dominated by the numerous small states of small population but equal representation just as clearly as one house or the other of some state legislatures used to be dominated b state rotten boroughs.

In actuality, the rotten borough which built into the Senate has not been semonstrably bad for the nation, any more than many of the state rotten boroughs had, in our history, been quite as nefarious as some reformers painted

We hope no one really wants or undertakes to try to reform the United States Senate in order to bring it into line with the Supreme Court's rewriting of the Constitution. We still like the idea of some checks and balances in

We would like, also, to have such sheeks and balances given a fair chance to win their way back into the state governments, if the people of a state should so desire it.

national identities will have to wait at east until it is clear that "one world" No modern ruling in the history would be consistent with freedom-the the Supreme Court has done more disame kind of freedom that was fought rectly to rewrite the Federal Constitufor at Concord and Lexington.
—SPRINGFIELD UNION ion than this one; when a handful of distinguished jurists sitting on a high court bench can so change the fundamental order and design American democracy had built into itself from its own humblest and purest beginnings it would seem the least of privileges for free men in a free country that they should some day get the chance to vote once more, as they had to in the beginning in order to establish it at all in he first place, for the form and style of government they themselves think best fitted to their idea of American democracy.

It is a very strong historical conjecture that if Connecticut hadn't offered to the Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia the "compromise" of one house by population, one house by geography which enabled the small states and the large states to join together in the United States there might never have been this federalized nation of ours. One would think we could manage to hold and pay more respect, today when we are 50, to the fundamental principle which enabled us to stay to gether when we were 13.

And Then There Were None? Down in New York City, three business enterprises in the public service field have been losing money steadily under the burden of costs decreed for them by the increased complexity of their own operations and by the payroll expense set for them by successful strikes of their unions in the past. In the effort to meet such a situation and continue in operation, these three enterprises have evolved a plan by which they will merge themselves down to two. If they can do this, they will at least be able to stay in business, and they will at least be able to continue to provide employment for the great majority of their present employes. This effort on the part of the three enterprises has been met, not by the cooperation of the unions involved, but by their refusal to let the merger take place on any terms except their own. So there is a strike against the proposed new enterprise — a strike conducted by the unions which have helped force the enterprises in question toward choice between merger and their own total disappearance from the scene. This would seem folly to most of us no matter what kind of enterprise happened to be involved. The fact that the enterprises thus threatened are newspapers, and that the unions which are thus throttling their destiny have a leadership which knows more about unning elevators than writing a storyas Jimmy Breslin so poignantly complained on this page last week-merely nakes the folly seem a little more sad and a little more ridiculous.

On the basis of principle and operation being pursued by the New York newspaper unions, they would eventually drive the number of newspapers being rablished in New York down to one, of business too by insisting that it spend just as much money operating as it had previously cost to publish six news-

Perhaps one shouldn't reproach these particular unions too much. The same dead end style of operation, in which we are always threatening to destroy the very things we claim we want to save and protect, can be found in other fields and enterprises, both at home and abroad.

Patriotism On The Defensive

Today is Patriot's Day. It will probably pass, even in this state that gave American independence its footho as another of those halfway holidays - good for baseball, the BAA marathon, and leisure for some of the population. This has been the pattern for the past 50 years, for that matter. But it is becoming more regrettable; for in these times certain voices are growing louder - the voices of those who would make patriotism a dirty girl. Miss Trask and Miss Phelps were among about 300 girls who modeled clothes that they have made during the winter at the Tolland County 4-H Clothing Review at Rockville High School Saturday night. The winners of the top honors were named toward the close of the program.

The eight winners and two alternates were actually selected from fifty girls taking part in a Teen-age Clothing Program at the Northeast School n Rockville on April 16. To be eligible, the entrants had to be 14 by the start of this year and had to have completed three years of 4-H club work. A committee of adult evaluators made the selections.

The contestants at the state contest in July will compete against eight girls from the seven other county 4-H areas for a spot in the ten-girl "Court of Honor."
