What If Busing "Succeeds"? One of the questions the opponents of the experimental busing of 75 North End of Hartford Negro children into Manchester schools like most to askand the question the proponents of the project seem to like least to answer, goes this way:

"What do you mean experimental" Isn't it foreordained that the experiment will be judged a success? And if it is, won't the proposition then be to continue it and expand it?" When the opponents submit this question, they act as if they thought they had the proponents in a corner. And the proponents also act as if they felt mselves to be in a corner. They have,

after all, been told, by the authors of the plan, that it is indeed purely experimental, and that is all, just experi-In our opinion, the question is no only fair, but sensible, and it deserves .

And a sensible answer to the question says that obviously, if the experiment is judged a success, it should then become the basis for an extension of the very same practice which has proved successful. If busing 75 children for two years into Manchester schools proves to be good for everybody, then the obvious thing to do would be to try same kind of experience to a larger number of children perhaps for a longer term of years, always providing i can be done within the existing framework of free individual town systems of

For some people, perhaps, this would seem a cause for good cheer and congratulations, because we had found some way to speed the way and prepare the participants for the day when, whether we like it or not, whether we vote it or not, we will all be living in a much greater mixture of skin colors than we do now. Actually, upon examination, it is that prize question of the controversy, which seems to give opponents of busing their greatest advantage, and proponents their biggest moments of thought-tied eticence, which is the most academic of all the questions that can be asked. There will be more and more Negro people in Manchester all the time, every year. Maybe some of them, when they come, will have had the previous ex perience of having gone to school here for two years. Maybe some of us, when they come, will have had some previous experience in coexisting with them. And that is perhaps the real extent of our choice-not how many get here, but how they get here, and what they are, and what we are, when they come.

"Prisoners Of Words?"

One can sympathize with Prime Minster Indira Gandhi when, confronted with domestic political criticism charg-ing that she is abandoning "Socialism" under American political and economic pressures, she presented the following plea in her own defense:

"Let us not become prisoners words. What we all want is a better life, with more food, employment and opportunity in conditions of economic justice, equality and with individual

"Socialism," she said, "is not a book of words nor a bundle of high sounding Her government, she continued, "is not wedded to any dogma." It should, she maintained, be judged on its performance, on what it does, on what it accomplishes. Not only Mrs. Gandhi, confronted do, and what they actually believe in with taunts about the sincerity of her wn "Socialism," would seem to stand in need, in the world today, of some liberation from the slogans of our time. There ought to be at least some interval of such liberation for almost everybody until, that is, there has been some more accurate definition of what the logan labels of our time really mean. Not only Mrs. Gandhi's "Socialism," but the Kremlin's Communism and Washington's democracy or capitalism or free enterprise would seem currently in need of some redefinition which would be based on what they actually with their own actual policies and regulations rather than on any comparatively transitory textbook codification

One suspects that any truly realistic examination into the supposedly domiant "isms" of our day would reveal that there is one which has actually taken charge of all the rest, and that this is that delightfully soulless and opportunistic and supposedly on so pracical guide called pragmatism. And we cite not the more rarefied, not entirely ignoble purity of definition William James gave to pragmatism in the dogma he provided for it, but that down to earth kind of pragmatism which says that almost anything is good "if it

This is a relatively recent dominance for pragmatism everywhere. Only yesterday, it seemed that the mood of the world's various divisions was for a series of absolutisms of creed and principle, in which following the book was the first, last, and only rule, It was, in fact, always decreed that if you followed the book, the result had to come out right, but that to depart from the book, even for an illusory momentary success, was the greatest possible sin.

Today the isms seem to be crumbling and dissolving, and cross-pollinating one another, and there seems nobody no matter in what orientation to what kind of curtain, who will not try anything if it promises to work. The diagnosis here is that we could stand a little more creed and principle. if we could decide once again what they are, and a little less well intentioned less cynical opportunism. But most of all, perhaps, we need, in the interim, what the lady Prime Minister implored—a little hesitancy about using labels recklessly in a time when it is difficult to be precise about what they

not able to control all the fringes of its territory, which is why the Vietcong or troops from North Vietnam have been able to establish supply routes through Laos, and why, beyond that, Laos has not violently protested the action of American planes in crossing the border and bombing inside Laos. The extent of such operations is indicated by revelstion that 11 American pilots have been lost in them during the past two years. The neutralist government of Cambodia pretends it does control its own territory, and pretends the Communist guerrillas have no refuge or routes or sanctuaries there, and therefore it protests when American military air power does operate across the Cambodian border. was after one such American operation that Cambodia broke off diplomatic relations with the United States. Vietnamese side of the border find themselves being fired upon from the Cambodian side of the border, they don't quite believe Cambodia's pretense, and, acting under general authorization from their own high command, they fire What Cambodia does in this new cirumstance has not yet been revealed. Perhaps it pretends neither violation of its borders occurred. Or perhaps it blames us only, thus revealing its own anti-American blas.

But the main truth involved is simple, and old. War, like fire, keeps reaching out for new fuel. It has its own inevitable escalations which do not necessarily wait for the formal decision of

Christmas Gifts Gather Dust CLEARFIELD, Utah-Santa Claus is now four months late getting to South Vietnam to deliver gifts from the people of the United States to civilians in that

Some 800 tons of Christmas presents were collected last December in the nationwide drive, sponsored by the U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce (Jaycees) and the Young Democrats and Young Republicans. Since then most of the ifts have remained stacked up in wareouses at the General Services Administration's (GSA) supply center here.

The gifts were to be shipped to Vietnam and distributed by U.S. troops as a goodwill gesture on a "people-to-people" basis. The Popcorn Burned, but, How About the Butter? Popcorn was never hotter than it was at about 4:30 yesterday afternoon when the popcorn machine in the Rockville Cinema went up in smoke. Firemen called to the scene carried the still smoking ruins out to the street. Further damage to the theater was prevented because projectionist, working in the empty theater, noticed smoke and called firemen. Fire Chief John F. Ashe said the blaze was probably caused by a short circuit. Only quick detection of the fire prevented serious damage, he said. (Herald photo by Saternis.)
