Zorro Image Disappears, Star Finds

HOLLYWOOD (AP) - To Adam West's worries that he might become permanently identified as Batman, Guy Williams remarks: Not necessarily.

Williams beat the game. A. few years back, it seemed as if he would be stuck forever with the image of Zorro. Yet this season he made a successful return to the home screens as Prof. John Robinson, the man who leads his family through a variety of adventures in CBS Lost in Space."

Come to think of it, there is much similarity between Batman and Zorro. Both hark back to the "Scarlet Pimpernel" theme of the young man who poses as a flop while being an undercover do-gooder. Whether on horse or batmobile, both made their entrances out of a

And both Batman and Zorre captured the fancy of the nation. Batman has done so while competing in the same time slot as "Lost in Space," although both are made by 20th Century-

'If that wasn't bad enough," said Williams, "earlier this season, 'Lost in Space' was on at the same time as 'Zorro' in New York City!"

Yet "Lost in Space" has surwived to orbit next season, and Williams with it.

His escape from the Zorre image was managed despite the odds—and an unfortunate circumstance.

"We made two seasons of the series, then Walt Disney got mad over his treatment at the hands of ABC," the actor recalled. "The suit was in court for two years and meanwhite I sn't allowed to do anything. I fest like a kept man; all I did was collect my ever-increasing

During that time, I had no chance to prove I could do anything else besides Zorro, But I was fortunate in being able to make The Prince and the Pauper for Disney. Then I made helped establish me as an actor. By the time I returned from Europe after three years, the Zorro image was pretty well sipeted.

"I don't mind the fact that 'Zorro' in playing all over the world on reruns. Those residual checks can be mighty comfort-
