He did not have to act the way he has acted, and it is not only natural but fair to hold him self and his nation in. But Saturday he moves into another realm. Stripped of all titles except that of father of the bride, he enters a brief phase in which he can do nothing wrong. Whatever he does will have something redeeming about it. If he happens to make some wrong decision, the understanding and sympathy of a whole nation will gush out toward him. If he really goofs on something, he will be granted instant forgiveness. Even his Httle awkwardnesses will suddenly become charming; his obvious attempts at artifice will, for once, win friendly smiles; indeed, so much understanding, sympathy and good will will pour out toward him, from all his nation, that some of it is likely to spill over into his whether so nice a father of the bride should, in addition to that ordeal, really be held responsible for unfriendly things like wars and strikes.

war, or tried to settle a strike, but millions of them have either played or been close to the playing of the role of father of the bride, and know how gennine that tear can be, how forgivable the pride, how zealous the effort to have everything just right for the little girl leaving the nest. Saturday, we're all with the father who happens to live in the White House

Some Borders Outrank Others

Secretary of State Dean Rusk has fficially informed Congress that the United States is being very careful to observe a special "no-bombing zone" along the border between North Vietnam and Communist China.

This zone is observed, the Secretary of State said, as a precaution against overrunning Communist Chinese territory. This makes one inquire what is so pecial about the territory of Communist China as compared to some other territories in the neighborhood of the ction in Vietnam. There is the officially demilitarized sone lying between North and South Vietnam, where we have now begun

There is officially neutral Camodia, where we have attacked villages with ahell and bomb. There is supposedly independent and neutral Laos, whose borders our planes ross with regularity And there is supposedly non-belligerent Thailand, which we use as the home pase for many of our planes which do our attacking in North Vietnam, but not, Secretary Rusk discloses, within a pertain distance of the Chinese border.

Where we do cross supposedly legal oundaries in the Vietnamese war, our ustification for doing so is always the The enemy has been doing it first; we are forced to violate somebody's supposed neutrality in order to prevent the enemy from having a free sanctuary or a free route through his own violation of that same neutrality.

But we could, if we were holding just to theory, apply the same reasoning to justify action closer to China, or, for matter, action inside China. We suspect that supplies and laborers come nto North Vietnam from Communist China; we are not sure some planes may not do the same thing. The difference, then, seems to be not me of principle, but one of size and nilitary strength. There is nobody to efend the demilitarized zone except be North Vistnemose who have themselves violated it. Cambodia can issue diplomatic protests, but it can't really frighten us. Laos is too divided and helpless to threaten anybody. The one border we respect in the whole region is that of the great world power, the great military power, that happens to be Communist China. It is almost as if we both shared the only kind of language either of us really understands a language none of the smaller nations in between us can manage to speak with a big enough bang to make either of us hear.

Democracy In The Middle The new regime in Argentina is shaping itself up into that kind of right

The Soft-Shell Crab

Nature's more fearsome creatures—a large, bony crust surrounded by numerous, dangerous, and ugly legs, like a

But this is only the view of a person reared in the Midwest, where lakes, rivers, and creeks grow nothing more awesome than the bewhiskered catfish and

This is why the first encounter with a saltwater crab is an experience not to be lightly shrugged off. And to think that one can EAT a crab is, for this same Midwesterner, a prospect to make one pause. This, however, only shows how provincial most of us are. Crabs are favorites in many coastal areas, include ing the Eastern shore of Maryland, which offers many reasons to back up its view that it is the sea-food center of

I was introduced to the crab—the soft-sheld variety that is totally consumed, legs, back, under body, claws -here at this tiny port at the southern tip of Tilghman's Island. My family and arrived here late one afernoon in our sailboat, tying up at the county dock. The only other boats in the small grasschoked harbor were working clammers and crabbers. We were the lone pleasure boat, a fact soon made obvious, for, it seemed, in the few hours between our arrival and dusk, half of the village's several score families-living in neat but weathered houses strung like beads along the village's lone winding street-

same down to inspect and pass time

Foremost among these visitors was George F. "Hardy" Jackson, a small, wiry man of 50 or so who lived in the house closest to the dock. He, too, was a clammer, though his own boat was temporarily laid up. He had worked in Baltimore before World War II, then returned to the island after the war to become one of the proud and independent breed that the Eastern Shore is known for. He was his own boss, the Eastern Shore's view of the only real way to live. But this acquaintance with Mr. Jackson came only after his unexpected gift to us. We had arrived at Fairbank after an unusually long day of sailing. We were tired. My log says that the crew (my wife and 10-year-old daughter) were "slightly mutinous." There were no marina facilities-rest rooms, showers, cold drinks. There were only mosquitos dead calm air, and a (to me) picturesque provincial port on the Eastern Shore. So when Hardy Jackson suddenly appeared on the dock above our boat (the ide was out) with a bucket of four large soft-shelled crabs, caught in a erab pot at his dock, it was a welcome break in the growing fabric of misery settling over our craft, the Lump, Lump. But what to do with four soft-shelled crabs? We had never before eaten them. Fortunately, Mr. Jackson was both provider and councilor, abetted by two they said, you merely cleaned them, rinsed them in fresh water, salted and peppered the meat under the soft shells on both top and bottom and the legs, and then fried them in margarine for 20 On our sailing voyages, I often double minutes or until they were light brown. the Jackson recipe. The crabs turned out superbly. After dinner, Mr. Jackson came down again to the dock and we sat and talked for several hours. He said that crabs can be steamed too. One way is to put a potful in a half-quart of vinegar. Another way is to steam a pot of crabs in a bottle of beer. Or, he said, one could salt, pepper, roll them in flour,

But he spoke disdainfully of these other techniques. Just a little salt, pepper, margarine, and frying was enough, and after our first delicious meal of softshell crabs I couldn't disagree with him at all.—DAVID W. HACKER, IN THE

ective Service spokesman said today the big draft call for October is not expected generally to affect college students. The spokesman said some local draft boards, because of local situations, may be faced with calling college students but the indications are this will not generally be the case. He also said that, even though the October call is for 46,200, the largest number since the Korean War, it is not expected that men over 26 who are still liable
