Unhappy Birthday

We don't know anybody who is glad to be reminded that today is the 21st anniversary of the day the United States of America dropped the first atomic bomb on the Japanese city of

There is, for this greatest of scientific and military achievements, surprisingly little pride in the "know how" and the technical competence in-

In fact, the nation which succeeded in making and dropped the first bomb seems to have been almost as glum about it, in the succeeding 21 years, as the nation upon which it was dropped. If we, the makers and the users, do feel anything in particular, that feeling might be described as one of a fateful We are uneasy over the fact that, 21 years after this thing was loosed from tts bottle, nobody has been able to put it back into confinement and control. We are uneasy with a feeling that not even we ourselves, for all our instinctive admiration of ourselves, have put very much really serious effort into the idea of preserving mankind, and ourselves, from new use of the weapon we

We cannot escape the weird feeling that, sooner or later, the Greek drama mexorabilities of our time are going to make us reap as we have sowed. Above all, we cannot think or talk or plan or fight our way out of a sense of almost complete powerlessness in the face of the powers we ourselves have

We are responsible for these powers, but they do not seem willing to be responsible to us; we created them; we cannot control them; the suspicion begins to gain among us that we are not creatures and actors after all, but merely inert, helpless passengers on a civilization which has gone berserk. Man may, some day, revive himself, and resume some rational command of his destiny. He may, at least, restore to himself the illusion that he has some little faint capacity to debate and influence what is going to become of him and his world. But today, the day of the coming of age of the bomb of Hiroshima, is not one of the days when it is easy for him to gain this glimmer of potential return to some position of reasoned influence on his own civilization. The bomb is young and lusty and uncontrollable. Rational man seems dead.

The Prologue

It seems to us that nature enjoys presenting her pleasant offerings with generally distasteful prologues, as if we might only cursorily acknowledge these offerings or even overlook them if they were presented to us otherwise. This reflection restores us to a measure when we consider the activities of an unidentified bird that hangs about our neighborhood. It may not be the same one each occasion, of course, but we would like to think that the particular brand of inspired maliciousness he deals in is not duplicative. Or if it is, that the law of averages does not place two birds of the same inclination in the same neighborhood. What this bird presages, we have generally found is the sort of clear, sun-lit day-perhans too model and free of flaw to be continually tolerable—that one always stores, like preserves, to bring up again in the winter months as fortifier against a gray cold day. What the prologue consists of and its time of performance might be expected to warp the enjoyment of such a day. That it does not gives credit to both bird and The first manifestation comes to us mercilessly, in that no man's land of bliss between sleeping and waking. In that rosy period, the sound is rather like the repeated cries of a flock of tropical birds that movies have led us to believe emanate from steaming junles. As consciousness begins pottering about, the sound is more localized and singular. The mind ascertains that it is morning as sunlight slips in the window like a housebreaker bearing gifts, and in virtuoso fashion it also checks out that the cry-something between a caw and the noise from a rusty-hinged doo -is from a bird poised in a nearby tree, seeing the morning in. Sleep becomes an abandoned love, for the cry demands the kind of rapt attention normally reserved for stuck car horns. In that hazy mental twilight mornings in bed invites, solutions to crimes always takes a direct if fanciful turn. We sometimes imagine ourselves girded in nightrobe and slippers stealthily making our way up the tree with unbelievably agile determination. At the crucial branch, we suddenly and triumphantly confront the foe with such a measure of our indignation that he is cut off in mid-cry and departs in a flutter of utter defeat. The prologue usually ends by the time we leave the house and face the warm morning. We've yet to meet our prologuer," this jester who finds his stage on a tree branch and urges our attention with a barker's cry of "The sun is up. The sun is up." But as we sten into the light, all the dreamy plans like morning mists in the bright sun. and the clearness of the early air refreshes us as sleep never could. All is forgiven. A. C.

Lawn Mowing

The closest that the ordinary citizen gets to the task of mowing today is the weekly stint on the lawn, assuming he is a householder with sufficient lawn to require attention. And even lawn mowing today is different from what it used to be. The rotary lawn mower with the cast iron wheels was an American institution for many years. The iron wheels gave way to rubber, and the mower itself was nechanized, with the result that one of the status symbols of suburbia today is power mower, even though the area to be cut, in some instances, hardly justifies the labor of starting the mower. That's one trouble with power mowers - starting them. We don't have one ourself, but we are surrounded by them It has been our observation that half the time is spent in pulling the cord or pressing the button, in making adjustments, taking things apart, fiddling with carburetors, chokes, spark plugs, or some other esoteric appurtenances, scowling all the while. Our own lawn mower, as we said, the kind that you have to push yourself, and that is what we do, now that the bo in the family has outgrown home and mower, too. True, we don't push it at the same pace that we used to. We were accustomed to taking out our resentments and frustrations on the mower. and we fairly made the thing smoke as we charged savagely back and forth with it across the lawn. The skipped spots and the uncut ridges stood out conspicuously in our wake as if to rebuke the folly of our imeptuosity. We accepted the rebuke, but we didn't slow

But we don't push the mower so fast these days. We make a more leisurely turn at the end of each sweep and we don't try to cover the distance at 120 steps to the minute. We're more careful about skips than we used to be, too. The lawn mower as a contrivance has never rated very high in our estimation. It is useful enough, to be sure. It performs its function as no other piece of machinery could do. But there is nothing interesting or challenging about it. We use it because we have to, and because it does a better all-over job than sickle or scythe, with less expenditure of

If we bought a power mower, the task of mowing would be even easier. We would buy a mower except that we have little faith in motor-powered contrivances, or, more properly, we have little faith in our ability to cope with them A second reason is that we don't like

So we stick to our conventional lawn. mower, smugly content in the notion that it suits us better than a motorized model, and happy that even if we don't bush it as fast as we used to we can still make it whir on occasion - MERI-DEN RECORD

There is an old Spanish proverb which runs: "Rivers were made for wise men to contemplate, and for fools to pass by without consideration." Water teaches us a great many lessons if we just take the time to learn. One of the strongest lessons is that water can rise no higher than its source. What is true of water is likewise true of lives. How can we practice love if our source is one of jealousy? How can we practice any of the greater virtues if we confine our source to that which is strictly worldly? RECEIVES AWARD

The Manchester office of architect Arnold Lawrence, A.I.A., recently received an award for the design and construction of the Sound View Specialized Care Center in West Haven.

At a recent annual awards luncheon in West Haven, Lawrence received a special plaque, bearing the inscription: "For excellence in design and civic value."

The design of the center is unique in that the patients' nursing units feature double corridor construction with patient roms on the outside perimeter, and service rooms between the corridors. This type plan has only been employed in general hospitals.

The 100-bed center's services include comprehensive care and treatment of the pre and postoperative, disabled and convalescing patient.

Whether stars beget stars or only children may be learned this fall as several relatively unknown children of highly known stars begin in their own series. Among them is Marle Thomas, daughter of comedian Danny Thomas, above, who will appear in ABC's "That Girl" starting Sept. 8, and Pat Wayne, son of actor John Wayne, below, who will have top billing on "The Rounders" starting on ABC Sept. 8 ABC Sept. 6.

launching their new works shows and returning series in one hectic week starting Sept.

However, at the end of July, ABC suddenly announced it would have "advance premieres" of 12 of its 16 new programs a week earlier — starting the day after Labor Day. The move obviously will give new ABC shows exposure to viewers while the two rival notworks are still abowing reruns. At this writing, neither NBC ner OBS have pushed up their opening dates.

Getting there first is considered to be a big advantage, so umably there will be counter-moves. But there is no place to go but into the pre-Labor Day led when audiences are down and interest in belovision is a how point,

The meneuvering is part of the bitter internetwork ratings race. There is little chance ti the networks will ever go back to their old habit of earmarking a week each for starting the fall schedules. The networks whose weeks came second and third akwaye felt it was a handicap.
