The Chicago Compact

Not everybody will be satisfied with e compact negotiated between the Rev. Martin Luther King and the civie eaders of Chicago, as has been evidenced, already, by isolated rebellions on both sides of the color division. Nor will everybody cooperate with the mirit as well as the terms of the agreenent. It will be par for the course, in fact, if fulfilment is slow and halting and imperfect — perhaps so much so that Dr. King feels required to reach for more of his marching medicine. Nonetheless, the compact, reached afel 10 days of negotiations dramatized by violence as Dr. King persisted in his parade-like invasions of some of the white ghettos of the Chicago area, should probably be rated an historie

It is a compact which does declare Chicago an open city. It is a compact in which the civil rights leadership, on the one hand, and the leadership of the exleting order, on the other, have joined in trying to set up the possibility of tomorrow—the kind of tomorrow that has to be if there is to be any tomorof existing fair-housing law. The Chicago Commission on Human Relations will increase its staff, and mitiate complaint proceedings if it chooses without waiting for minority complaints to be filed.

The Chicago Housing Authority will "scatter" some of its new housing projects around instead of concentrating them in existing Negro neighborhoods. The savings and loan and bankers associations promised to lend mortgage money without regard to race, while the United States Department of Justice promised to question federally insured loans made by financial institutions found guilty of racial discrimination. Representatives of the city's major religious faiths agreed on a seven-point program, including education of their membership on the "moral necessity of an open and just community" and a program for welcoming Negro families into white neighborhoods. This is all on paper, with some tinge of sincere pledge and conversion, one can be sure, on the part of those directly involved in the negotiations, and among the American groups they represented. Actual practice of these principles and agreements, and full acceptance of them in all the hearts and minds which will eventually be involved will be a slow and troubled struggle. But at least the problem has been faced, openly, and a course been set.

Some People Play With Polls With all due deference to certain personal charms and distinctions, along with a still admiring memory of his late brother, we wish to observe that polls purportedly showing Senator Robert. Kennedy the most popular Democrat in the country are obviously haywire in the way polls can get. It can be agreed that, as the poll-they are getting certain answers and reactions which, when correlated on their charts, give "Bobby" the apparent favored position in the country's

"Bobby" are not that the public likes Bobby so much for himself, but rather that the public is looking for some way of expressing the fact that it doesn't, at the moment, find itself consumed with positive admiration of either Lyndon or Hubert.

This is a luxury kind of opinion sentiment, which doesn't cost anything, and doesn't take anybody anywhere, and doesn't commit anybody to anything. But as so often happens in the polling process, what people tell the polls comes from one level of their minds and hearts, and not necessarily from that level where any choices that The voters of Hubert's own state may say, in August of 1966, that they would prefer to see Bobby run for vice presifent in 1968, but that doesn't mean that, come 1968, they will elect delegates that way. The voters of the nation may indicate, in the summer of 1966, that they think more warmly of Bobby than they do of Lyndon, but that may really mean only that they do wish their President would watch out a little more eagerly for signs of peace, rather than for room for escalation, in Vietnam. If they were actually given some real opportunity to choose, today, which man should be in the Presidency on Sept. 1, we would, if we were a gambling department, be glad to give odds

None of this is to deny that Senator Kennedy is creating a certain stir, and scoring a few points, and climbing. But how he really rates is something the public plays with, in its mind, when the pollsters come along, but has not yet really pondered seriously.

The trumpets should sound, in honor of a small and perhaps indecisive victory in the rear guard action the concept of the free American individual has to keep fighting in these times.

This small but pleasing victory came the other day when Mayor Lindsay issued an executive order instructing the city's License Department to stop requiring the fingerprinting of entertainers and all other employes in the city's This means that 17,000 people, who have to be fingerprinted for no other reason than the fact that they work in cabarets, will no longer, in the future, be subjected to what some of them have considered both unnecessary regimentation and indignity. And it means that some entertainers, who have carried their fear or dislike of the fingerprinting process so far they refused to apply for permits to work in New York City cabarets, may now de eide to appear in New York after all. Frank Sinatra, for one reason or another, is one of those who has boycotted the New York club stages, rather than

So it is a small, good victory that, henceforth, people who happen to work in cabarets in New York City won't be subjected to the special indignity which some backward Americans still associate with the idea that they are being classified with the country's criminal population.

But it is, of course; only a small, and obviously a temporary, kind of triumph. The cabaret employes who are thus excused and let loose from the fingerprinting requirement will soon be caught and snared in some other great society ritual which will lead them inexorably back to the ink pad. Soon the cabaret employes will be like everybody else-

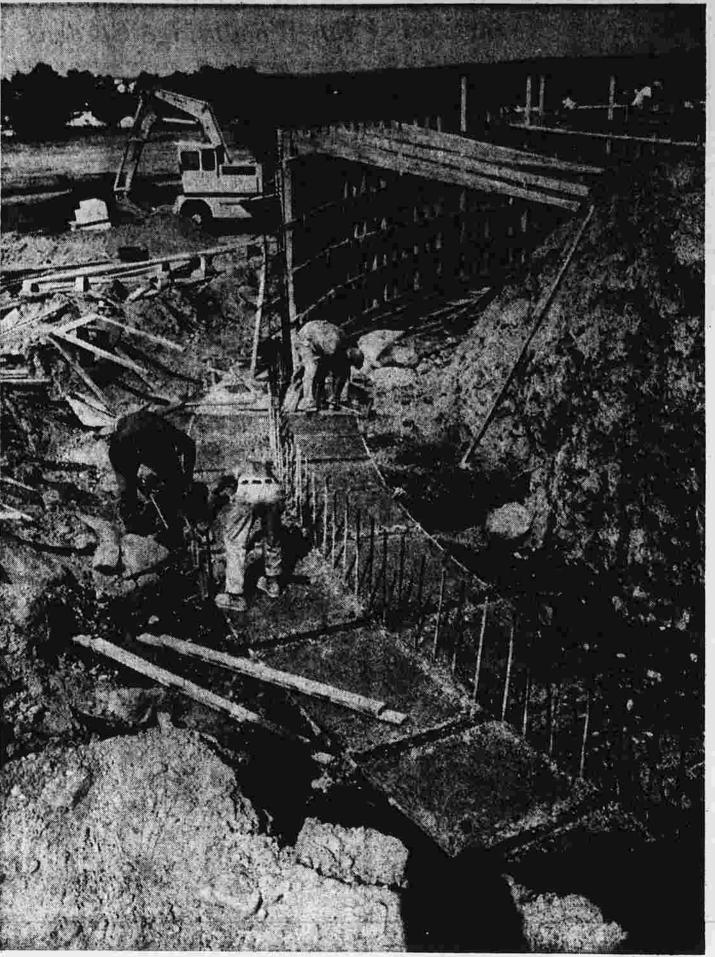

Moral War Made Immoral

Humanitarian considerations in the war in Viet Nam have been getting added emphasis recently from many religious sources. Their admonitions about using immoral methods to fight a justifiable war of self-defense are gaining popular support and justifiably so. Lawrence Cardinal Shehan of the Catholic archdiocese of Baltimore recently warned that all is not permissible even in a war waged on moral grounds. He said that immoral means to win it would, in effect, betray a just motive. The Christian Century, a Protestant publication, recently printed articles by two medical scientists who condemned the military tactic of battling the Viet Cong by destroying crops through spraying of chemicals from the air. Now in New York City this week, a group of Quakers is putting to a test a ederal prohibition of shipment of medial supplies to North Viet Nam. Refused shipment at the Post Office in New York, the group readdressed the packages to friends in Canada, who in turn will ship them to the Viet Cong Red Cross. Other medical supplies were addressed to the Red Cross in South Viet Nam, showing that the group was not partial in extending humanitarian people—whether they are soldiers or ompletely different type of situation is olved. There can be no question as to whether it is moral or immoral to help an injured person and ease his pain and suffering. The Rules Committee of the Connecticut General Assembly is the most reatless housewife we have ever encountered. family comfortable, and then, just about the time one thinks it has achieved something that could be called the ultimate in accommodation, it decides it wants to move.

It was the Rules Committee which, a couple of sessions ago, finally achieved its dream of many long years. It chased most of the working depart-ments out of their traditional space in the State Capitol, leavmr only ceremonial offices for a few high officials. The resulting vacant space the Rules Committee then redistributed among various functions which kept the space really occupied or busy only during that period of each biennium during which he Legislature itself would be

One of the Rules Committee' most famous creations was, of course, the Hawaiian Room, a genteel spa where male legislators could retire for occasional refreshment of the thirst and relaxation of the mind. There were those who thought the Hawaiian Room a luxury, but we have come to consider it an efficiency as we have noticed how quickly legislators who might otherwise be inaccessible way downtown can be summoned, for some crucial floor vote or report of a bill, away from a drink or a poker game.

There was a legend, in the last session, that one legislato was able to respond to a summons, appear on the floor make the report on a bill, see it passed, and get back to the Havalian Room in time to find that his ace in the hole had been matched by one face up. It did make for an occasional slow game, but it was still part of a fast, convenient Along with such special conveniences, the Rules Committee in its motherly way, also found itself able to distribute special offices, both for use and for prestige, to any number of maor and minor satraps of the Legislature. The Committee seemed to have space aplenty. and we had never seen the Legislature run with so much social ease and so many good cubbyholes to hide in. To get to our point, then, we
