Gengras Hits State Moves On Pollution

HARTFORD (AP) .-Clayton Gengras, Republican gubernatorial candidate, has again expressed dissatisfaction with Gov. John Dempsey's attempts to solve the water pollution problem in Connecti-Speaking at the annual con vention of the State Labor Council, AFL-CIO Gengras said Dempsey's answer to the pollution problem was the creation of a 100-man Clean Water Task

"Frankly, I can't imagine that a 100-man committee could ever have taken any action worth taking," Gengras said Thursday. Gengras told the delegates that, "I am not so foolish as to expect your endorsement. But neither am I so foolish as to think that I can win or deserve to win if I do not have the confidence of the Connecticut labor

Gengras went on to accuse Dempsey and the Democrats of having failed to keep a list of promises which they made to labor in 1958. He then made some promises to the labor movement himself. And then he promised to keep his promises, which were:

"We shall extend the coverage and benefits of workmen's com pensation; make it illegal to fire a man because his wages are subject to garnishment; increase of lie detector devices by employers on prospective employes, and extend the rights of collection; demand an end to the use

perts are taking the view that the country has enough individual identity and haracter of its own to slip through the experience relatively safe and intact. One outside influence in Thailand is that of the Communist ideology which in its early guerrilla and village indoctrination stages in the northern, poorer section of the country.

The second outside influence is that of the United States, which now has some 25,000 military men in the country, primarily, the news suggests, to operate the growing air fleet we maintein there in order to do our bombing in Vietnam.

The first outside influence enjoys the opposition of the Siamese government. The second outside influence—that of our military presence—has its blessing. The 'reasons some students of the Siamese situation give for their opinion that the country can survive both encroachments center largely on the contrasts between Thailand and Vietnam.

Siam has never been colonized. It has never been divided. Its people are 90 per cent Buddhist, and the same kind of Buddhists, to boot. It has had only one brief, experiment with democracy; most of the time it has had conservative rule which, though dictatorial, has been consistently strong. The country's social order is also relatively stable. Never having been ruled from outside, the people have an instinctive independence and self-reliance.

From such appraisals, there doesn't seem much doubt that Thailand can weather the Communist Infection in the North, or that it can bear the combined weight and economic benefit of the gi-existence in which it has to be exposed to both outside forces at the same time. Each outside force, by its own presence, automatically and inevitably involves Thailand in the struggle going on outside Thailand. The presence of each, inside Thailand, constitutes a magnet which tends to draw the other in greater force into Thailand. There is a limit to the extent to which a nation can play host to the struggles of others, and still retain an identity of its own. As the United States builds up its own military commitment in Thailand that is, in one view, an increase in security for the country. But it is also, of course, an increase in its danger. Thailand's best recourse, against Communist infiltration, against too much United States, will remain its own sense of its own national identity.

using only one method to fight inflation, a method, he said, that "is actually heightening the problem." Economists say there are three ways to fight inflation, he said.

The country may be heading for a recession or a depression if the problem is not straightened out, he cautioned.

"To continue to practice deficit spending and to continue to have the government compets with private borrowers for money is accentuating the problem." Goldberg noted.

The other two alternatives cited by Goldberg to fight inflation are the reduction of feederal spending in domestic areas and particularly deficit spending and a tax increase. He remarked the tax increase is unpalatable but "it is far better two alternatives contended to the into a house, was increased in mere than the meeting to be for derar on the Wilbur Cross High at which crashed spending and to according to the Encyclopedia at 8 p.m. at the club rooms, and that a fence, state police in the durch.
