Weak Spot On The Ticket

The Democratic nominee for the ffice of Heutenant governor of the State of Connecticut took time off from tampaigning one day this week to arrange to raise the money to pay off his real estate tax bills in his own town -some of them five or six years old. He had been, he explained, withholding his tax payments from the town in order to try to build capital for a real estate development in which he was inwolved. What this meant was that he was borrowing money from his town and its taxpayers. When this business was exposed by the Republican State Chairman, in response to some political hatchet work the Democratic nominee for lieutenant governor had undertaken as his contribution to the Democratic state campaign, the nominee for lieutennt governor, as we said, took a day off and raised some money and paid his old

The chief importance of this incident has been that it has been a reminder to the people of Connecticut of something they might have found it more pleasant to forget, and something all good Connecticut people, Democrats and Republican alike, have been quietly regretting ever since the Democratic state convention was held last summer. In two of its state ticket nominations

-one of them for the office of lieutenant governor — the Democratic State Convention, apparently fat and careless n its pride in the power of its state achine, exerted less than the normal mount of respect for the intelligence and taste of the voters of the state. The Democrats, in this action, were ot being fair, even though they had his ersonal acquiescence in the nominations they were making, to Governor John Dempsey, with whom the lieutenant governor nominee is now bracketed the voting machine lever, so that o one can vote for the one or reject he one without doing the same thing o the other.

ers of Connecticut have a new freeom, under the optional party lever now n use, to weigh individual candidates for individual positions. But they can't split their vote for lieutenant governor. The political machine running the Democratic State Convention knew this, but, instead of making it a reason for special care about the caliber of the nominee it was to place in the spot, took as a license to nominate anyone it pleased. Its action remains an unnecesgary blight on the choice offered Connecticut on Nov. 8. No End Of Double-Talk?

Finding reality in the midst of a world which seems to insist on running itself by double-talk is an increasingly difficult process. We point, for instance, to the feroicious oratorical onslaught Premier Kosygin of Russia made on Communist China the other day. What he said was that Communist
