Couple Survives 11 Days on Peak

(AP)-A car stuck in the snow led to the rescue of a Canadian couple who survived 11 days after their plane crashed on a northeastern Washington peak. Roy Brown, 35, of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, and his wife, Betty, 32, were reported in good condition today at Mt. Carmel Hospital here. Mr. and Mrs. Brown, the parents of six children, had been the object of a wide search in Canada and northeastern Washington since their single engine plane vanished Nov. 24. They were flying to Vancouver, B.C., to join relatives at the Grey Cup Canadian championship professional football game Nov. 26. There was no sign of them until late Sunday afternoon when Ron Ruble of Colville heard a cry for help as he was trying to dig his car out of the Ruble looked up and saw Mrs.

Brown floundering through waist-deep snow. 'Wait for us," she cried. "Our plane crashed.'

"We'll wait." said Ruble. "We're stuck." Mrs. Brown helped free the Good Use Of Land We Can Spare The original purchase of the Globe Hollow tract from Cheney Brothers, for watershed, park and recreation purposes, was voted for a variety of reasons. One of the most influential of se reasons was that some Manchester people thought it an important safeguard for the town's future if the town itself should control the future destiny of this tract, instead of allowing it to go on the open real estate market, as it would have done if the town had failed to make the purchase. Some of us bring more school and other service exinses to the town's tax rate. If, at that time, or at any time since, the theoretical question had been asked what would be an ideal use for any section of this tract which wasn't needed for recreational, watershed or park purposes, and the suggestion had been made that this would make a fine site for a college of some kind, there would, we imagine, have been general and enthusiastic approval. That would still be the answer, if the question were being put theoretically. And it is also, we believe, the answer that should be given, with certain qualifications, when the question is being put specifically about a particular college on a particular part of the ract, as is now the actual case.

What would always have been considered an ideal use for a part of this tract would still make an ideal use of part of the tract now that the college nvolved is the Community College which is already functioning after high school hours in our high school plant. The basic attractiveness and soundness of the proposition is not altered, when it comes to the process of community decision, by various fringe considerations, like the strategic way in which Community College authorities have chosen to unveil their progressive needs, or the fact that somebody who has been in politics stands ready to develop land on the other side of the proposed college site. Such circumstances add to the gossip, and to some of the amotions, in the situation, without, however, contributing basic argument one way or another.

Nor should we sind, in our discussion and decision process, snagged on the thought that we are about to give the state of Connecticut, and its Community College, something for nothing. This should be handled as a business transaction, in which the state will be dealing with the town as it might deal with any other property owner.

It may be that, since the town approves of the Community College which bears its name, and is indeed anxious to have the College remain in Manchester, the town has no instinct to prove a particularly hard bargainer with the

But the price the state is to pay the town for the acreage it needs should be determined through a process of professional appraisal, and it would, naturally, considering the change in real estate values since the town purchase of the tract, represent a dollars and cents gain for the town.

Manchester Community College was originally established, by Manchester enterprise and decision, to be a Manchester institution, on a footing which meant that its subsidization and auxiliary support would come from Manchester town budgets. On such a basis, if the institution were to flourish and continue and grow, we ourselves would eventually have been forced to provide campus space for it, in which case it might well have been our eventual decision to allocate to this institution, free, the very acreage now in question. Now the Manchester Community College is out of the town budget, and it is backed and financed by the resources of the whole state, and we are being asked to sell to the state for this institution land which we might otherwise ually have decided to give to it. We have land which is in the right and which can be spared as a lice off the giant Globe Hollow tract.

main thing that remains, in our a, is to see that the price asked state is neither impossibly high, nor

The No Halftime Game

Watching a football game on educational television the other night was a pleasant experience. Not only, of course, was the presentation free of commercials. It was also free, as far as we noticed, of that non-commercial commercial to which educational television has been trending lately - the friendly little announcement that-to imagine one for a football game-"the following presentation of the following football game is made possible in part by a grant from the Royal Pigskin Converter Corp."

No, this presentation of a football game was not only completely free of even the educational television type of commercial.

It had another innovation which was priceless.

The second half began about 30 seconds after the first half ended.

This is, of course, something that can only be accomplished when a game has been taped for showing at some later date. Then it becomes a relatively simple matter. The producers merely drop out the halftime tape, with all the marching, counter-marching, story-telling formations, baton-twirling, highkicking and chest-arching that has become the great bore of autumn afternoons for television and stadium audience alike. The announcer says that now the second half begins. And it begins. This is on educational television showing a game that may have been played a week or so before. But it is such a pleasurable experience, when one encounters it, that it spurs wickedly pleasant thought about what a small amount of imagination might do for commercial football.

All commercial television needs to do is have actual play of the game start half an hour before the production is put on the networks. Then, when halftime occurs on the actual field, that is neatly excised from the procedure, and the network joins the second half of the

The bands still march, the twirlers still twirl, the chest archers still arch, the fans still stretch and treat their hunger and thirst, the players still get their talking to in the dressing rooms, and nothing whatsoever is lost, except a half hour which the home viewer usually spends frantically looking for some other game on some other chan-

Which Way But Upward? Clinging, as this state has done, to the compulsory auto liability insurance system is becoming less defensible all the time and such alternatives as financial responsibility - possibly the "basic-protection" proposal just filed in the Legislature — are looking better all the time. The 12.7 per cent average increase in compulsory passenger car rates just asked by the insurance companies on the basis of last year's experience may be trimmed considerably by the insurance commissioner. But the year-to-year rate spiral will undoubtedly be sustained.

A spokesman for the companies pointed to "severe inflationary forces" as making the increase necessary. But this probably would apply in any state; there are other circumstances here that play a special part. Claim frequency, n which this state consistently has led the nation, climbed again this year, and so did the amount of the average claim. The Automobile Legal Association cites, as an example, 1963, in which Massachusetts had only 13.5 fatalities per 100,000 population as compared to a national rate of 23.1. Yet the state was 300 per cent above the national average on bodily injury claims frequency. Massachusetts is one of only three in the nation that use the compulsory system, and . v York-one of the other tworanked second in the nation in claims frequency for 1964, the last year for which such figures are available.

plan, basis of a measure just filed by State Rep. Michael S. Dukakis o Brookline, has the compulsory feature but would eliminate the liability principle. That is, each individual would be insured against injuries to himself, rather than injuries he causes to others. Whether the system would encourage recklessness is one question; and other aspects will have to be weighed carefully. But it promises to reduce court costs hence insurance rates drastically by eliminating much litigation as to who was at fault and who should pay. Prof. Robert E. Keeton of Harvard Law School and Prof. Jeffrey O'Connell of the University of Illinois College of Law

The basic-protection auto insurance

But the failure of the financial-responsibility legislation backed by Gov. Volpe in the past session throws a doubtful light on the chances of any measure to end compulsory insurance - improvement or not. That proposal would have required any driver who had had an accident to show proof of financial responsibility - not necessarily insurance. It would also have creata fund for payment of unsatisfied udgments. And merit rating, affording premiums to safe drivers, would have been possible. Possibly-over the course of his four-year term-the governor, backed by fresh plans like Mr. Dukakis', will have success with this or some other less costly, more equitable system than Massachusetts has now.

When Massachusetts motorists get word of their new liability rates-they should remember that the same situation probably will be repeated next year. And it will go on for as many years as it takes the Legislature to discard the wasteful relic of compulsory auto insurance as it operates now. - SPRING-
