The "Human Shield" Story

Those who believe the American role in Vietnam to be totally justified and than the whole long record of atrocities

Much of the time their charge is true.

One key explanation of the way the spotlight happens to fall on American or South Vietnamese misdeeds is, however, quite valid too. It is that we ourselves are responsible for what we do, and at least partially responsible for what our allies do. An atrocity is so much the worse, in our outlook, when it is our own. We are supposedly the civilized ones, above the level of the sup-

As for the main part of the record, the worst things we have done in Vietnam have been by accident. We are represented there by civilized men. Much of the atrocity and horror in Vietnam comes not from the choice of human beings, but from the seemingly remorseless and conscienceless nature of war,

The other day, there came out of Vietnam one story of brutality and atrocity which delighted and cheered the ranks of all Americans who feel that this is something of a holy war, to he fought hawk-style. The story hit the news, and the air waves, and it became, within the first 48 hours of its life, the favorite citation of all those who think we can prove ourselves more right and good in Vietnam if we prove the enemy

This was the story of the terrible slaughter which occurred when the Vietcong reportedly used a "human shield" of village women and children in order to protect their own forward attack on a South Vietnamese division.

This story should have been somewhat suspect from the first, because it inti-

The next day, the story was corrected. It was corrected not only by the testimony of the wounded civilians themselves, but by that of the American colonel who was serving as adviser to the South Vietnamese unit involved

According to Col. John E. Lance, sen-for American adviser to the South Vietnamese infantry division involved, there was no such thing as any Vietcong attack using a human shield. There was
