Kennedy Book Bares Red Alert After Shooting (Continued from Page One) lar activity" by Supreme Court

Manchester quotes Warren as saying: "The president told me how serious the situation was. He said there had been wild rumora and there was the international situation to think of. He said he had just talked to Dean Rusk, secretary of state, who was concerned. He said that if the public became aroused against Castro and Khrushehev there might be war." Manchester agrees with the commission's finding. But he says its "real work" was done by the general counsel, J. Lee Rankin, and the 14 assistant counsels. As for the members of the commission, Manchester writes," the lustrous names of the seven appointees were for public consumption." Manchester also is critical of actions of Secret Service agents before the assassination and immediately after the first shot struck Kennedy. He makes these points: 1. On the night before the tragedy, "nine agents of the White House detail were out on the town. They started with beer and mixed drinks at the Fort Worth Press Club." 2. "At various times, they were joined by three agents of the 12-50-8 shift - who were officially on duty, assigned to

EMBER AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULA-

Manchester Shrinks Its Share

It seems almost inevitable that if Manchester is going to try to sustain Fund it must try to arrange some system of contribution by payroll deduction comparable to the system already in existence in the employe groups of

One of the prime quarrels between the Manchester United Fund and the Hartford Community Chest counterpart, when they existed separately, was that payroll deduction contributions in Hartford took away from Manchester the donations of many Manchester peo-

Now that the two funds are joined, and there is only one campaign, and the money to be distributed among member agencies in Manchester comes from the central fund, it becomes a matter of some honorable obligation on the part of Manchester to see that we do not now begin giving less than we ever

The Manchester statistic for the secand year of our participation in the union with Hartford indicates that we lid begin giving less, substantially less. In our opinion, the main explanation for this decline in Manchester contributions has been a decline in the amount of solicitation. Now that Manchester no longer stands on its own feet, United Fund wise, it hasn't been working quite

Furthermore, we might as well try the truth. Solicitation is no longer what is used to be, anywhere. Voluntary campaign work isn't what it used to be, anywhere. We get more and more businesslike and more perfunctory in our good deeds; eventually, one assumes, most giving by individuals is likely to disappear and the institutions it once supported will draw their financial sustenance either from the giving of corporations, or from subsidies from a government using the money of all its

In the present stage of evolution, there is still a phase in which the individual gift is still a factor. But the only easy, efficient way to solicit and collect it is to resort to the payroll sys-

Without it, we are afraid the natural course of events would be for Manchester's giving to the United Fund to continue to diminish even more shamefully than it has already diminishedto diminish not because we are black of heart or stingy with our dollars, but, to put it quite frankly, because nobody makes sure that everybody is asked directly to give and given a direct opportunity to give. So long as the payroll deduction system of contribution does stay in effect for contributions by individuals, we think the system should be brought to Manchester, and we would subscribe to the plea voiced by Dr. Charles E. Jacobson Jr., president of the Manchester United Fund this year, in his letter to the Open Forum yesterday.

During all the years when Manchester stood alone, we had the feeling that Hartford was, through the payroll contribution system, receiving money that should more properly have come to our own needs and causes. Union with Hartford was, therefore, the curative route, to equality of collecting and sharing. But we have begun to neglect to collect from ourselves as well as we used e, when we stood alone. We have begun to carry less than our proper share. ir. Jacobson naturally wants to end this not too creditable situation. The remedy he suggests is, we think, the right one, and the only one that has

We have rushed through to ratification a Constitutional Amendment setting up procedures for taking over the power of the Presidency from an incapacitated incumbent which may prove to offer more temptation than safeguard. We rush to take fertility pills which produce human litters.

Heaven knows we need balance wheels, and restraining agents. In the instance of what will be, if it goes through, the greatest railroad merger in history, there may be some doubt whether the Supreme Court should ideally serve as this agent of caution and restraint. There was a lot of appeal in what Justice Abe Fortas said, yesterday, in his dissent:

"The courts may be the principal guardians of the liberties of the people. They are not the chief administrators of its economic destiny." Amen. They should not be, either, the chief administrators of admirable causes like racial integration, or the reapportionment of state legislatures, and sometimes, functioning in these areas, they create new monstrosities to replace the evils they battle against. But there are occasions when no one else moves, or stands in the breach, or accepts responsibility, and then, sometimes, even though it may be a strain of a court's natural prerogatives, one has to applaud the fact that a court does move forward and offer itself as a last resort. The mere fact that it is big, or that it happens to offer some kind of haven for the New Haven-at a price which could, so far as the public knows, be either reasonable or very low -does not make the proposed merger so sacrosanct it should not be required to withstand all the scrutiny all those unfavorably affected by it can demand.

No Peace Of Tongues? For the past decade there has been recurrent notice of the fact that although the modern, sophisticated, civilized nation of Belgium could survive the rape of two world wars, it cannot guarantee itself a civilized peace between two sectors of its own population who have been born into the speaking of two different languages. And we have seen the same kind of question challenge and harass the government of India, until it has had to abandon its own idea of a nation united culturally and linguistically.

Now the same instinctive, endemic kind of trouble is rearing itself in Yugoslavia, where, ever since World War Tito, by one method or another, including, no doubt, the permanent silencing of some tongues, has somehow managed to operate a single state out of many separate cultural and ethnic and political heritages. He has been able to control a good many difficult elements. But intellectuals quarreling bout languages are another story. The most he has been able to do about them so far is make speeches about them, denouncing the efforts of the Croatian and Serbian language partisans to disrupt the hard-won brotherhood and unity of Yugoslavia. We keep wondering how somebody intelligent would design this world of ours, if given an opportunity to start over again from the beginning. Could it be done with just one language, one climate, one family, one human appearance, one religion?

Or would that merely mean there would be even less sense to the reasons we would concoct for being at one another's throats?

The Family Farming Business Most Americans rightly value the family farm. They associate it with sound moral values, good home life, stability. They deplore what seems to be a trend toward corporation farming -"factories in the field."

At its convention in Oklahoma City this week, the president of the National Farmers Union, one of the country's major farm organizations, called in the United States Department of Agriculture to make "a clear and unmistakable policy statement" in support of the family farm system and to take strong action to implement it.

Few would argue against this proposal. The United States does not want ts farms run by a board of directors as is General Motors or U.S. Steel. Many people are already alarmed when they see banks and absentee owners operate large holdings with paid managers and

But agriculture has already experienced a revolution due to mechanization, changes in the urban business structure, (which have affected farm marketing), technological advances, federal programs. Many small farmers have been unable to make a go of it under new conditions and have quit. Their land has been eagerly bought or rented by their larger neighbors. Some specialized types of agriculture, like broiler and egg production, have been taken over by cor-

To many observers it seems that these developments are leading straight to corporation farm management, union ized employes in the field-and the end of the farm home. It need not be so. The enlarged famlly farm shows great vitality. Many responsible agricultural economists expect it to survive. But they also see a need for national policies that will keep the family farm strong—such as, for example, an adequate credit structure. We warmly agree. The family farm system has made American agriculture amazingly productive and at the same time has produced a magnificent crop of young people each year, providing man- and woman-power for both city and country. Congress has a responsibil ity for appraising existing and new farm programs to make certain they are designed to keep the family in the farming business. — CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
