Guardsmen Get Riot Lessons

Basic War Principles to Apply

WASHINGTON (AP) -New military training directives stress that National Guard units are to apply basic principles of war if called upon to quell any future street riots. The half-million guardsmen also are being taught new methods of dispersing mobs, ferreting out snipers, quickly apprehending looters and protecting utilities, hospitals, banks and communications media. "Meet force with greater force, but avoid bloodshed," says one of 16 detailed lesson

Guard instructors this month. The Army prepared the leason plans when the Pentagon, at White House direction following the Detroit and Newark riots, ordered a five-fold increase in the National Guard's riot control training. Although unclassified, the National Guard Bureau wouldn't release the lesson plans, saying the Army forbade it. Official Army channels also refused to supply the plans but The Associated Press obtained a full set of the documents from other sources.

In Lesson Plan No. 11, under a section titled "Application of the Principles of War to Riot Control Operations," this statement appears: "An examination of military literature has indicated that the principles of war are applicable to all types of military situations. These principles are also basic in the execution of riot control operations."

The principles of war are gen-strategy such as economy of force, maneuver, unity of command, surprise and simplicity.

"We've always been taught that the principles apply to almost everything," one officer said, "but they're emphasizing them now because we're getting into more situations that rethan just breaking up crowds." Guardsmen also are being told in the series of special lectures to give extra protection to certain community installations. "The loss of the supply of water and power can seriously endanger the health of the community," the lesson plans say. 'The seizure of stored weapons

FIRST TIME DONORS—7 PINT DONORS—IRREGU-LAR DONORS—Here is your opportunity to help oth-ers particularly during the summer when blood collec-tions are usually low while the need remains the same. Join the ranks of this wonderful group of humanitarians by contributing YOUR pint of blood. To those who have never given blood before—will you give an hour of your never given blood before—will you give an hour of your time and a unit of blood to provide a lifetime for some-one else? It doesn't hurt you but it will help another. 1 GALLON DONORS Henry W. Tilden

Waddell Supports Hanson In Letter to Democrat Head Mins Margaret Atwood of

Walter Waddell, Board of Education chairman, has written a letter to Charles Lathrop, Democratic Town Committee chairman, calling the attention of Bolton Democrats to the primary Wednesday and to the candidacy of incumbent board member Dana Hanson.

Hanson and Harold Porcheron, caucus-endorsed candidates, are being challenged by Mrs. Virginia Butterfield and Robert Thornton, who made an unsuccessful bid in the caucus.

Miss Margaret Atwood of Manchester and Claude E. Robinson Jr. of New York City were united in marriage Saturday morning in the chapel of Storrs Congregational Church.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fay Atwood of 100 Westland St. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Claude E. Robinson Sr. of New York City and the late Mr. Robinson.

The Rev. Winthrop E. Stone of Storrs Congregational Church performed the single-ring ceremony. Mrs. George W. Multord of Palo Alto, Calif., sister of the bride, was organist. The

The Congo's Chances Vs. Chaos

Congress over the fact that American nilitary transports were being used, in the Congo, to transport troops of the central government of President Mobutu into pursuit of the 150-odd mercenaries who have been dominating the eastern fringes of the country.

There were people in Congress who were nervous over such a showing of the American hand in the Congo. It deelops, from actual experience, that they should really have been worrying about what would happen if, as a presumed favor to President Mobutu, we did transport his troops into contact with the rebellious mercenaries. For what has happened every time the white soldiers who fight for pay meet up with the official army of the Congo is that they eat it up-or at least frighten it off into the bush. The more of this kind of help we try to give Mobutu, the more the mercenaries like it.

The romantic spectacle of a mere 150 well trained, disciplined, free-booting mercenaries finding themselves in a position where they can practically dictate to the legitimate government of the whole Congo is not really very romantic; it is mainly very tragic.

For better or for worse, President Mobutu is the nearest thing the Congo has to any hope of political stability and be in his present trouble because he designed the immoderate measure of trying to hang Moise Tshombe. For better r worse, Mobutu is the character American policy has been championing in the Congo, and assisting with more than the occasional loan of a military transport plane.

Mostly for worse, the mercenaries are in the corner of Tshombe, who has generally been bad news for the Congo and for prospects of stability for the Congo. Whether they are in Tshombe's corner to prevent Mobutu from bringing him back from Algeria to hang him, or in his corner to try to lead a new revolt which would once again set up Tshombe in a separatist Katanga Province, no one seems really to know.

So what is happening is that 150 white men, originally hired into the Congo to be professional soldiers, are all too close to being able to master a great big chunk of the heart of Africa, ust as if we were in the early colonial conquest days of the last century. There are not very many clear moralities in he situation; the best possibilities available are not too much better than the worst; perhaps the United States should not be there at all, with its diplomatic friendliness to Mobutu, its loan of planes, its reported activities by the

But, in posing this kind of consideration, one falls back toward the same and of argument President Johnson uses most effectively to justify the much more expensive and expansive American intervention in Vietnam. Look at the alternative. Do we want to hand the whole Congo over to the dictation of those 150 mercenaries? If we were not involved in that Vietnam there would be hardly a quibble over the answer in the case of the Congo. Indeed, so far as logical analysis can tell, there is hardly any difference whatever in principle in the two situations. Anyone who wants to argue that we should be in one place would have to concede, it seems to us, that we should be in the other. And we don't see how anyone who argues that it was wrong for us to intervene in the one instance can claim it wrong for us to try to play a hand in the other. The truth is, we think, that no one really wants to argue intervention or no ntervention, hand or no hand, in either place. What we all want to argue about is the degree and extent and cost of American intervention. If we had been able to keep our intervention in Vietnam short of a major war, there would have been no question about a military airlift in the Congo. As it is, one of the rabid fans to tell the players, even with a scorecard. Another is that expansion poor young big country's best chance of avoiding chaos lies in the Mobutu government and not with the mercenaries or with Tshombe, and the tragedy i that that much of a good kind of chance for the country is in grave danger.

The People Last

Unflinchingly, as if they acknowledged illegiance last to the people of the country and first to any special interest, the committees of Congress are setting up a postal rate bill which will increase rates for mail which already pays its own way in order to continue subsidy to mail which very few recipients would choose to receive, if they were allowed At present, the proposed increases will lift the cost of sending a first class letter from five to six cents, the cost of what used to be the great American institution of the postcard from four to five cents, and air mail from eight to 10

But for the junk mail which floods the postal system and jams the mail boxes, and loads the wastebaskets of the country, there is in prospect only the gentlest kind of rate increases-not nearly enough to make the junk mail pay its own way.

If there is any single thing the federal government ought to be willing to ubsidize, if subsidy should prove necessary, it would be the privilege of ordinary communication by letter and by If there is any single thing the federal government ought to be least willing to lic facility for purely commercial gain. Yet the service it should be willing to the service the federal government continually overcharges in order to be able government nor people have the slightest obligation or responsibility. The answer would seem to be that letter writers do not know how to lobby, but that somebody else does.

The tragic experience of some of the world's larger cities, whenever such an attack of smog has had any special duration, constitutes warning sufficient to justify such emergency measures. What is more, the whole development of this Atlantic Seaboard into one vast city, which is releasing an ever increasing amount of pollution into its own air, is proceeding at a pace so fast no one can really judge what the risks are getting to be. The wrong spell of weather could conceivably expose millions of people in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, gency. There is, therefore, no official caution too great, whenever such a spell of weather seems to have begun. Another good thing about such emergency alerts on the part of our health officials is that they may lead to greater public and official awareness of some of the more extreme instances of constant air pollution. There are residents of Manchester's North End, for instance, who think that no special smog emergency is required to render obnoxious and injurious the regular belch of asphalt fumes to which they and their properties are subjected. Not only the blight it casts upon existing residences in the area, but that it would have hanging over any new nousing project planned in this North End Renewal area should be a concern for public officials concerned with the nealth, the cleanliness, and the good reputation of Manchester as a decent place to live. Here is one instance in which no special weather condition is required to produce smog. Here we make our own. Is there anything which makes this particular brand of air pollution good?

Bad Baseball Business In an effort to remain exempt from antitrust laws, major league baseball magnates long have maintained they run a sport, not a business. While the argument has been and is shaky, it's true that some of them seem inclined to ignore sound business principles. At the moment, for instance, the American League wants to split into Eastern and Western divisions, each with five teams. There's some talk that the move would bolster fan and player morale since no team could finish lower than fifth, but that ignores the fact that every year two teams, instead of one, would finish mired in the cellar. In any case, the prime concern obviously is not morale but money. At the

'Putting up the Brush' of Nature Center Bridge necticut, "rose to a peak" Saturday as a crew of Manchester Jaycees began the last phase on construction. Giving their project an added note of authenticity, the workers here mark the raising of the roof peak by "putting up the brush," a good luck custom often practiced in colonial times, according to Mrs. Madelyn McAwley, director of Lutz Junior Museum. The practice is said to have originated with the Druids of England who worshipped trees, Mrs. McAwley said. The evergreen sapting being holsted here was domated by Burr Nurseries of Manchester. The covered bridge, the Jaycees community improvement project for the year, spans Porter Brook at Luts Oak Grove Nature Center off Oak Grove St. Completion is planned for Oct. 1. formist goldsmith who was given an order to design and make a $200,000.00 gold chess set? He has, phrasing it mildly, a very unusual clientele. He stubbornly refuses to use diamonds in a claw setting; claims such settings show how much money a person has instead of taste. He refuses and never makes cuff links or earrings to match each other.

The floor in his shop is a mass of odd sizes and shapes of costly marble set in concrete, jumbled with semi-precious stones—agate, turquoise, jade, topaz, ruby, sapphire and diamond chips. He did this to keep 'uppity' customers in their place by himself being able to say, "So what, I walk on the stuff."

In his own peculiar confrontation of life, he purposely pictures a fault in people who strive for a higher standard of living as something to be worshipped as a god. Idolatry can never create genuine happiness. Worldly riches can never help any one answer two important questions in life—"Why are we here?" . . "Where are we going?" . . .
