Secretary of State Rusk has now joined Democratic National Chairman Bailey and House Speaker McCormack in the new Johnson administration defensive-offensive against critics of the war in Vietnam. This concerted effort is obviously sparked by the new life for doves concerned Asia.

Secretary Rusk's gigantic press conference effort to discredit and refute the critics of the administration policies in Vietnam covered many angles of the continuing controversy. Discussing the issue at such length, however, Mr. Rusk inevitably indulged himself in a typically bland tactic of his more often than is usual for any one performance of his. Perhaps, by taking just one of these cleverly maneuvered statements of his, we can illustrate the one most consistent talent of his spokesmanship In his opening statement Thursday, Secretary Rusk floated out this particu-

"I have heard the word 'credibility' injected into our domestic debate. Let me say, as solemnly as I can, that those who would place in question the credibility of the pledged word of the United States under our mutual security treaties would subject this nation to mortal danger. If anyone who would be our adversary should suppose that our treaties are a bluff, or will be abandoned f the going gets tough, the result could be catastrophe for all mankind."

Here is a considered, planned statethe following:

"It (Washington) likes him personally -particularly his obvious honesty, his conviction, his sense of decency and his sense of humor."

qualities present in the particular statement we are quoting from Secretary Rusk must be a somewhat cynical sense and inversion.

We have indeed, just as the Secretary said, all heard of the word "credibility." Only, as we have heard it, this word has applied in a domestic sense. It has meant, as it has been used, that we Americans, or some of us at least, have begun to think we cannot depend upon our own titular leaders-President Johnson, Secretary Rusk, and their sometimes technically anonymous "informed sources" - to tell us the truth about what has happened, what is happening, and what it is intended to have happen in Vietnam. It means we are no longer sure, some of us, that we can trust what our leaders tell us about what they are leading us into. This is what the "credibility gap" has become recognized to be, by everybody, until Secretary Rusk took hold of it in the pas-

Suddenly, in this passage, the issue of "credibility" is shifted away from the elemental question of whether the American people can believe their own leaders about what is going on in Vietnam to the quite different question, in quite different context, about whether this nation can be depended upon to keep its "pledged word under our mutual security treaties."

tion in presenting and interpreting these

This is the typical and usual Rush technique as a debater. Again and again, over the past three years, he has commitments to the American people

This is a brilliant substitution, if, in actual practice, devices of argument which tend to falsify the issue ever come out winning anything in the end. Secretary Rusk wound up, verbally, with what amounted to a resounding retort on the "credibility" issue. Only the 'credibility" he was talking about-the good faith of the United States to its own treaties-was quite a different matter from the o"credibility" which has hitherto had its place in the national debate, and which concerns not the good faith of the United States to its commitments abroad, but the good faith ing the argument of his opposition over into an area of altered context or altered assumptions and then, having sev ered it from its own valid connection seemed to demolish it with a ringing phrase. Again-of the four qualities Reston attributes to him, "obvious hon esty, his conviction, his sense of decency and his sense of humor" - only one, a slightly Mephistophelean sense of humor, seems especially appropriate to such a sample of his debating prowess.

Congratulations To All The Heroes The final remarkable excellence of what the 1967 baseball season turned out to be is that even the outcome of the World Series leaves the losers and their fans not dissatisfied. Manager Dick Williams had it right when he told his players to hold their heads high. They had done so well to get where they did, the normally bitter lisappointment of a final loss had no business entering into the emotions either of players or fans.

It was part of the good picture with which baseball faded out for 1967 no only that the Red Sox had come so unbelievably far, but that it had taken true heroics to defeat them in the end From beginning to end, this Series was meeting of genuine, not synthetic heroes. And when heroes meet it is destined that even though all cover them selves with glory, some one must win The particular hero who got to pose in the final victory scene was Cardinal pitcher Bob Gibson-a hero of immense performances indeed. We reneat what we said at the be ginning of the Series-that the Boston Red Sox this year proved themselves the best thing that has happened to baseball since Babe Ruth.

Once again, it became a game o skills on the field rather than a shuf fling of franchises, a game in which the roster of players once more became a familiar household litany, a game in which it was fun to care who won and all this-truly a "great Series" as the extravagance would have it. And aside from the spirit and competition and color, the record books on Series play open to receive five brand new records, and list new ties for 35 existing records offer statistical proof that the actual performance on the field reached new glories. Congratulations to the Cardinals and the Red Sox, and to all their heroes to Gibson and Brock, Lonborg and Yastrzemski. Maris and Javier, Scott and Petrocelli, Flood and Foy, and Mana gers Schoendienst and Williams.

Exercising The X Factor

Meriden has been mercifully free from race riots so far-and we want to keep it that way. That's the best reason there is for welcoming the new Chamber of Commerce approach to the city's racial Meriden's commercial and industria eaders, through the Chamber, commited themselves to the in-depth study last month. Under present plans, the community Affairs Committee will involve itself in long-term consultation with minority group leaders and with public and private agencies which are involved in work to reinforce human rights and human opportunities. Employment, housing, and education will be the three fields on which Cham ber members plan to concentrate. From the results of their study they will deermine what presently-existing pro-strongly support. In the fields of education and of em ployment the Chamber's contribution be even more direct and valuable Chamber members are the city's busi ness leader-the men who make the decisions and set the policies on hiring, on job training, on the employment

Their concern should start with the school system. It should involve a survey of Wilcox Tech to ascertain that it is, as we believe, providing the most modern, useful and adaptive training possible. It should direct even more atention to the high school non-college courses, those which train youngsters who want to move directly from school to a job and who, if they fail to find

Local business people must also look to their own training programs, their employment policies, their willingness to treat job applicants and employes as human beings who can learn and grow not just as cogs in the machine. It is here, and with a project of fitting the unemployed to the opportunities available, that a new Chamber program would offer the biggest challenge.
