MEMBER AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULA-

Rad Night At Municipal Building first sample of what the biennial review of the performance of the General Manager, conducted by the Board of Directors, can be like. One must remark, first, upon the rony of the demonstration, which was that the political party which had been primarily responsible for instigating the charter change which put such a biennial review into our Manchester practice sat silent through the evening, and had no questions to ask of the General

It seemed, second, that the questions as put to the General Manager by the Republican members of the Board of Directors were unusually and unnecessarily rough and brutal for the normal tenor of public life in a civilized com-

A third comment is that, although the callousness with which the questions were framed seemed unnecessary, some of the questions concerning actual points of managerial conduct were valid, and did deserve, for the future good functioning of the two main branches of

Manager Robert Weiss, responding to treatment which obviously intended to be rough and tough, remained civil and very well for the evening.

gers or town managers or mayors are ever called upon to submit to.

It was introduced into the Manchester Charter as the intended tool by which one political party had its particular ideas of bringing the post of General Manager within range of its own political pressures.

It has now been employed by the other political party in a semblance of open political war on the present incumbent in the managerial post.

Manchester has had good years under ts General Manager-Board of Directors charter. They were years in which no political party ever tried to operate, just because it had happened to elect a controlling majority of the Board of Directors, as if it owned the General Manager too. For a happy number of years, both parties joined, whatever their status, in conceding to the General Manager a civil service, non-political kind A good General Manager should, in return, respect the genuine, legitimate patronage and policy interests of the political parties, but should himself be come captive to none. We don't want, in Manchester, a "Republican General Manager" or a "Democratic General Manager."

Nor do we think it should happen, either, that we should drift into a situation in which it seems to be the case that one party is the champion, the other the would-be nemesis, of any particular General Manager.

Manchester seems to us, at the moment, to have drifted much too close to an atmosphere which will be bad for the General Manager-Board of Directors form of government, bad for the town. There should be a closer and more eager fidelity, on the part of the General Manager, to the principle of consultation with the Board of Directors on matters of policy, even though this does very often entail a slowing down of decisions and actions.

And there should be, on the Board of Directors, an adoption of the courteous philosophy that a pencil is a sharp enough instrument to be making a point

For many years, it was a recurrent concern, with thinking Manchester people, to try to protect both the General Manager and the Board of Directors from the savageries of a shifting public meeting phenomenon which became known as the "shadow board."

What percentage is there in letting our real government descend to the bitterness and techniques of the erstwhile

Both the General Manager and the Board of Directors have the privilege of serving the people of Manchester. Let them both remember it, deep in their hearts, and prominent in their actions, including their dealings with one an-

Unusual Battle Report

It is where it still controls perhaps a majority of population, either through persuasion of policy or terror of its own ruthlessness. It is where the battle for South Vietnam has to be won, sooner or later. But, so far, it is not where Americans have chosen to try paigns which destroy so much and up root so many. What we have been trying to sample out there is a some what gentler approach - the so-called

He noticed that hands at least twice before, with the Vietcong forcing the government out after it had thought itself well established. He quoted a saying of the peasants, to effect that when buffaloes battle. mosquitos die, meaning that when big outside governments battle, peasants do the dying. Perhaps what Military Expert Baldwin wound up implying, without ever intending such a thing, was that the real battle in Vietnam could never be won until all the buffaloes took

Yale Blues

Yale and Vassar is as dead as that between actor George Hamilton and Lynda Bird Johnson. But the proposal has caused some thinking both at New Haven and Poughkeepsie.

After the decision of the Vassar trustees was made known, Yale quickly announced that it intends to establish a women's college of its own.

The trustees announcement at Vassar in spurning the Yale "merger" used words like "loyalty to a place as spaclous and beautiful as ours" had a poetic sound indeed. But there were practical reasons which entered into the decision, according to an article in the New York Times Sunday editions.

The enormous cost of uprooting a college, in dollars, was apparently one of the prime considerations prompting the trustees decision. There was the problem of building new buildings, disruption during the transition period and, of utmost importance, whether the Vassar supporters would be as generous toward a college which would have abandoned its traditions along with its location.

The reason why the idea was launched in the first place was that Yale President Kingman Brewster Jr. wanted a women's college at Yale and Vassar President Alan Simpson wanted the advantages that such a combination had

President Simpson seems to have gained something even with the refusal. proposition itself seems to have shaken up Vassar authorities to the extent that they realize that in today's world there is no place for an idyllic campus sheltered from society as a training ground for the young women of

As a result, upcoming Vassar proposals include, among other things, encouragement to students to plan their own courses of study; to establish smaller colleges within the college, to deal with topics like urban affairs or international studies; to create an urban campus away from Poughkeepsie (e.g. a residential center in Manhattan.)

In short, the trustees in rejecting the Yale-Vassar merger have come to the realization that campus-bound education cannot flourish by itself and even the most prestigious colleges cannot find themselves and achieve their goals in

It is even bruited that Vassar is contemplating the use of "its not inconsiderable female attractions" to persuade some men's college to open a branch somewhere on its spacious 950 acres.

The significance of the failure of the merger was graphically demonstrated last Saturday between the halves of the Yale-Harvard game. The Yale band formed a monogram of "Y" entwined with "V" at the center of the field at Yale Bowl and slowly the marchers forming the "V" separated and marched to the other side of the field leaving the "Y" cold and alone.

Some of those among the 68,000 in the stands could swear they heard a long sigh from the Yale cheering section when the maneuver had been completd. - BRISTOL PRESS
