'Individual, Glamor' Important

NEW YORK - "There are two important words in fashion today. One is 'individual' and the other is 'glamor' " said Morton Myles, designer for Jeunesse, to the fashion writers gathered to see the styles from which American women wi choose for this spring. "A few years ago women were proud of the little-nothing black dress, and then make-up got so pale that a woman was in danger of disappearing. Tha was the time that hair started getting higher and higher, and I think that women were trying to get even for all those little-nothings. Now a woman can be something, can be an "And until recently it was opulence that carried clothes, not glamor. The glamorous look of the 1930's, that we have been seeing in those old movies on television, is coming back in real life, the look that will stop traffic at a cocktail party.' In Mr. Myles' own collection, which is priced more moderate ly than those of most designers who have been showing this week for the American Designers Series, the traffic-stopping look is represented by a dinner dress in a black-and-white print on such a large scale that the skirt is black and the bodice mostly white, with a wide black sash at the tight waist, and the print cut out in a scallop neckline that would be noticeable anyway because it is so A red jacket, waist-length, is the traffic-stopper at Adele Simpson's, for it is sleeveless above a silk twill, long-sleeved blouse in a large ribbon print of red, white and blue. By the way, that patriotic co-

Split Roads To Integration

The main issue is to escape from the evil our civilization has done, and contimes to do, to one class of human beings who have skins of a certain color. The urgency of the issue is that, if we cannot hide it, we confess and invoke our own failure as a civilization, as a

The ultimate good solution has to be just about everything that can be included in the meaning of the word integration. To be for integration, in any and all of its stages, is to be with the angels. To be against it, in any degree or stage, is to be reactionary, prejudiced, and fallen and lost.

tion in this issue-a growing split among those who champion the civil rights cause, and champion the rights and aspirations of the Negro.

first be brought to the status and dignity from which integration can be attained in the end.

Those who preach the doctrine of separation-not as a permanent thing, but as the necessary transition phase toward eventual full equality of all kinds-use two main arguments.

physical and psychological situations.

tally impossible to conceive of any physical, administrative method for achieving integration for the school children of the city of Washington, who are now almost 100 per cent Negro. They happen to be right; nobody knows how to make more than a token dent in the ghetto which has become the whole

They will say, second, those who favor separation as the only viable road toward eventual integration, that none of the current methods toward integration can produce really lasting or significant dividends until the Negro has first rediscovered his own pride, his own talent, his own capacity to build himself a life and a status equal to that of anybody else. Only when the Negro has come up to that feeling and that status, pretty much by himself, only when, to use the most feared words, he has black power, can he, they say, be ready for lateral movement across the top plateau

Those who argue this way run two risks. First, they run the risk of being accused themselves of being traitor to the cause of the Negro, using smooth word and theory to get out of fighting the fight for integration now. And the second risk they run is that their stand, and the arguments they use in supporting it, are likely to be snatched up and used as alibis by those who would never be for integration under any circumstances. The invitation to pose as a true ultimate friend of the Negro who opposes instant integration for the Negro's own good is the type of invitation which proves irresistible to the bigot who is looking for plausible of the Navy behind it, it is not going to give the Senate collective indigestion. Mr. President, I requested and have now received from the Department a copy of the winning recipe. The fact is that despite three years in the Navy in World War II, I had never even heard of the Navy bean soup competition which goes to show how uninformed one man can be. I am confident, however, that the rivalry was spirited. One pictures Navy men sending in exotic recipes from all over the world. Perhand the finalists squared off with ladies by the Pentagon kitchen.
